DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor for the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.

10.—DISPUTES.—In case of a dispute, the decision of the Editor is final.

MR. NORTH, of "CAGE BIRDS," in Reviewing it, Writes:—
"This sample of grit or bird sand is of a very highly commendable character. The grains are of just the right size to be absorbent when in bulk, besides which it contains larger particles which the birds will readily appropriate for purposes of grinding their food as it gets into the gizzard. The sample also appears to contain sea shells in fragments, and crushed egg shell, from which growing birds will derive elementary constituents, for bone and feather formation, while the breeding stock will have within their reach plenty of calcareous material with which to constitute strongly-formed shells for their eggs, and enough saline matter to keep their systems free from feverishness. In a word, it is a substance extremely suitable for the purpose of the thousands of Canary and cage-bird enthusiasts, who are always on the look out for high-class goods to aid them in their endeavours to keep their pets in good health and happiness.

THE LAST WORD

in Roller Canaries is Leipzig. For quality and quantity of song, the Leipzig Rollers stand supreme. No other strain of Rollers sold at far higher prices can come within miles of them. I have an enormous selection of the real Leipzig Rollers in stock, all in perfect health and full song, day and gas light, with long, hollow and double rolls, sweet silvery trills, waterbubble runs, soft roulades, piccolo trills, jug-jug of Nightingale, deep bass rolls, hollow bell rolls, flute notes, etc., etc., and guaranteed to be absolutely free from Titlark or any other objectionable notes whatever, price 6/6, and 7/6 each. Special Bandmasters, which excel in the deep bass and hollow bell rolls, 10/- and 12/6 each. Few guaranteed genuine Seifert contest Rollers, 15/-, 17/6, and 21/- each. These Seifert cocks are real professor birds, with a cascade of overflowing melody, and are fit to win contests immediately. Ordinary loud, free singing Hartz cocks (often sold as Rollers at fancy prices by unscrupulous dealers), in full, loud, vigorous song, day and gas light, my price 4/6 each, seven for 28/-. Singing box cages, 1/- and 1/6 each; specially made Roller song cabinets, with folding doors, 2/6 each; all are safely and warmly packed in special travelling cages, free of extra cost, and sent on full week's approval, either on receipt of cash or deposit with CAGE BIRDS. I take all risk during the whole time, and unless perfect satisfaction is given and your every expectation realised, every penny of your cash is refunded. See last week's CAGE BIRDS for few testimonials, and below for few more, which have not been used before. "Watling-st., Bridgtown, Staffs. January 3rd. Sir,—The Roller cock gives every satisfaction; please send four hens. Yours, H. Jukes." "27, Union-st., Heywood. January 2. Sir,—I wish you a happy New Year, as I have had one since receving the Roller; it started singing as soon as put into cage, and has been singing all day, and is still at it as I write this. It's the best I ever bad. Yours, J. Duckworth." "1, Roebes-terrace, Wexford. January 4. Sir,—The Bandmaster at 10/- is the best I ever got. I have paid from 10/- to 21/- to other dealers for Rollers, and this one beats them all. Yours, Michael Crosbie." "Strickland-place, Kendal. January 4. Sir,—Am perfectly satisfied with Roller you sent, it's a gem, a living musical box. Yours, J. Richardson." "156, Bede Burn-rd., Jarrow. January 5. Sir,—Please send Seifert Roller. I got a gem from you in October '07, and what a singer he is, and only paid you 7/6 for him. I have perfect faith in your judgment, and know from experience it will be perfect. Yours, J. Young." "Bolton-st., Bury. January 5. Sir,—I am glad to say I am delighted with Roller you sent me, I never heard a better. Assuring you of future orders. Yours, W. Roberts." "Neath. January 7. Sir,—Roller arrived safe, and I am pleased with it, thanking you for promptness. Yours, W. Worth." "North-rd, Wingate. January 6. Sir,—Received Roller safe, and am very well pleased with it. It is singing splendid. Yours, F. Jackson." "10, Little Wind-st., Swansea. January 6. Sir,—Hartz cock safely to hand, and am very pleased with him. Please send another. P.O. enclosed. Yours, G. Webber." "Preston, Lancs. December 16. Sir,—Roller arrived in good condition, sung well half-hour after arrival and ever since. He will surprise my friends when they hear him. Yours, J. Nichols." "573, Wakefield-rd., Bradford. December 14. Sir,—Roller arrived in pink of condition. I scarcely know how to thank you for such a good songster. There is no need for depositing when dealing with a straightforward man as you. Yours, F. Stebbings." "19, Clough-rd., Birkby, Huddersfield. December 17. Sir,—Roller gives every satisfaction, it sings from dawn till latest night, its voice is very sweet, and notes quite true. I would not part with it for three or four times price I paid you. Thanking you for honest and straightforward way you have treated me which I cannot say of others. Yours, W. Robinson." "15, Hill-row, Pentwyn, Glam. December, 22. Sir,—My second Bandmaster arrived in pink of condition ,and sang in less than five minutes after put in cage. Shall certainly recommend you. Yours, W. Gwynne." "45, Patrick-rd., Plaistow. December 27. Sir,—I am very pleased with Roller. It started singing on Thursday, and on Friday it sang so much I had to put it in dark, as I was afraid it would injure itself. It is singing well while I am writing this. Yours, W. Baker." It stands to reason that unless there was something exceptional about my Rollers I should not be continually receiving such shoals of testimonials from delighted customers. only a few of which are published weekly. I am the only importer of this strain of Leipzig Rollers, and no other dealer can get one feather unless he purchases from me. That they are by far the best Rollers on the market I have always asserted, and as a thorough test I ask you to have a Roller from me, and one from elsewhere at any higher price, test them side by side for a week, and keep the one which suits you best. I frequently receive letters from persons who have done this, saying that the Leipzig Roller supplied by me has beaten Rollers obtained elsewhere, which cost three times the money. Remember you have a full week in which to try my birds (although they will sing in few moments after unpacked), and unless you are satisfied in every way, you have the whole of your money refunded. Note name and address of England's largest Roller retailer, and only importer of the Leipzig Roller from "Hans Weber."

HULL C.B.S.

Annual general meeting held at the Oddfellows' Hall on January 4th, when a large number of members attended. Mr. Potter reported that, after all accounts for the year had been paid, we should have a balance in band, but owing to the non-attendance of one of the auditors, he was unable to present a signed balance-sheet, but would do so at the February meeting. Mr. T. Perkins was declared the winner of the cup for most points gained by a member at all shows throughout the year (champion section), Mr. Pepper (late holder) being only 5 points behind, with Mr. Calam very close up as third. The cup in the novice section was won by Mr. Oliff, after a very good tussle with Mr. Potter. It was decided to hold the open show on November 19th and 20th, this being the samo date as last year's. The election of officers, which was by ballot, resulted as follows:—Chairman, Mr. George W. Oliver; vice-chairman, Mr. Tom Perkins; hon. treasurer, Mr. Howe; committee, Messrs. Barwick, Brumby, Harland, Kling, Pepper, Potter, Stamford, and Stones; auditors, Messrs. Chapman and W. Sowden; delegate to C.B.U., Mr. Jesse Calam.—ERNEST R. I have to inform you, writes Mr. G. Fuller, the secretary, that it has been found necessary to cancel the Hampshire House Bird Show.

Derwent Valley Show report in the crested class states, 3rd, Routledge, writes Mr. J. Hands (Ryton). This should read 3rd Hands.

I have just received an order from New Zealand through my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. T. B. Wrigglesworth (York).

Every week CAGE BIRDS is a budget of useful and pleasant reading, and I owe my success in a large way to it.—A. S. BAWN (Bristol).

In the Yellowhammer class at Llanelly Show, I won second prize, writes Mr. John Davies (Cardigan), and not Messrs. Ford and Son.

I look upon "Cage Birds Annual" as a very instructive book and a boon to all fanciers.—D. BLACK, secretary Glasgow and Dis. Derby O.A.

CAGE BIRDS is the bird fancier's liberty paper, and has done more to place the Fancy on a sound foundation than anything else.—J. M. MACDONALD (Wallsend).

Kindly discontinue my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. Hunt (Nottingham), as I have received more orders for birds through it than I am able to supply.

We hear from Mr. Morgan Lewis (Haverfordwest), that owing to his removal to the country, he is compelled to dispose of his stock of winning Yorkshire Canaries.

The financial statement of the City of Glasgow O.A. for 1908 shows a balance of £105, which reflects great credit on the capable officials of that go-ahead society.

"Cage Birds Annual' has been a great help to me. I wish CAGE BIRDS also every success, for it is the best birdie paper of the day.—GEO. WALKER secretary of the Brechin C.B.S.

Llanelly Show report in the Yorkshire clear yellow or buff hen class reads: 1, T. Williams. This should read 1, Jones, as I won this in a class of eight.—JOHN JONES (Treherbert).

OBITUARY

MR. JOSEPH HODGSON (Pelton, Co. Durham.)

It is with the deepest regret, writes Mr. Lance Hall. hon. secretary of the Pelton and Dis. C.B.S., that I have to announce the death of one of our members, Mr. Joseph Hodgson, of Pelton, County of Durham He only took to his bed through a severe attack of pneumonia on Thursday, January 7th, and he passed away on January 9th, aged 37 years. I am sure all fanciers in the district will join us in sympathy with the widow.

The Leigh and Dis. C.B.S. have a substantial balance in hand for 1909, writes Mr. R. H. Davies, the hon. secretary. All intending new members and friends are invited to a washing exhibition to be held at headquarters, Railway Hotel, on January 20th, at 7.30 p.m.

Entries for Halesowen Show, to be held on January 21st and 22nd, are very short, writes Mr. Chapman, the hon. secretary. The date has, therefore, been extended to last post, Monday, January 18th. Will fanciers please rally round and make the show a success?

I have just had word, writes Mr. Thos. Pope, hon. secretary Western Counties O.S., from the Great Western Railway, that they will run an excursion on Friday night, February 5th, to London for the Crystal Palace Show, from stations in Cornwall and Devon. Particulars will appear shortly.

[illegible] that owing to business exigencies I am reluctantly compelled to resign my post as secretary of the Clapham and Dis. C.B.A., writes Mr. Stephen H. W. Baker. Mr. A. C. Askew, of 152, Manor Street, Clapham, an enthusiastic fancier and breeder of Hybrids, was unanimously elected to fill the vacancy. All communications should in future be sent to him.

The letter written by Messrs. Shearn and Owens to Mr. Maggs, secretary of the Bristol F.A., and published in CAGE BIRDS of December 12th last, has attained considerable celebrity. One or two of the more remarkable of the, shall we say, vigorously worded sentences therein have attracted the attention of "Mr. Punch" who quotes them in his issue of December 26th last, and many journals up and down the country have copied them from the pages of our national humorist.

READERS

should make certain they get the art supplement and three coloured plates, viz., "Two Wee Gems," "A Family Party of Goldfinches," and "Foreign Birds for Beginners," with their Birthday Number.

Owing to a tremendous rush of advertisements at the last moment, reports of several society meetings, members' shows, and other items, have had to be held over until our next number, in which we hope to print all of them. We regret the delay in giving them publicity, and ask our readers' kindly forbearance.

I have resigned the position of secretary to the Rochdale Good Intent C.B.S., writes Mr. Sam M. Clayton. The position has been taken up by Mr. F. Rayner, 312, Halifax Road, Rochdale, to whom all communications must now be addressed. Will other secretaries please note?

We hear that the following are the winners of the Aitchison specials for most points in Norwich at the recent Scottish International Show by exhibitors not resident in Scotland: Yellow cocks, Mr. Sam Cook 15 points; hens, Messrs. Cleminson and Taylor 12; buff cocks, Mr. Tom Seed 22; and hens, Mr. Alf. Grey, 25.

Mr. A. E. Garton has resigned the secretaryship of the Hyson Green C.B.S. (Nottingham) through pressure of business, writes Mr. Wm. Cottingham, and I have been elected to fill the vacancy. All matters relating to the Society should be addressed to me at 9, Peveril Street, Nottingham.

In our schedule there is an error in the special prize list, writes Mr. E. Broadley, hon. secretary of the Windhill, Shipley and Dis. O.S. It says 2s. 6d. will be given for most points in each class; this should have read: "except class 15." And in the extra specials it reads 15 to 20, 21, and 22; this should have read: "16 to 21 and 22 and 23."

Entries for our show are very short; in fact, up to time of writing I have only received five entries, writes Mr. J. G. Leech, hon. show secretary of the Dudley and Dis. C.B.S. We have therefore been compelled to extend entries to Monday morning's post, January 18th. Will fanciers kindly help? There is good prize money and no less than 43 specials.

I notice you mention, writes Mr. F. A. Watt (Banff), that I was 15 hours on the journey from Banff to the Scottish National Show. I was, however, 20 hours on the way, instead of 6 (the usual time occupied), and included in the 20 was a walk through snow for 6 miles to get a connection on the main line, the branch line being blocked. Best wishes to CAGE BIRDS for 1909.

Respecting the recent Inverness Show, writes Mr. Edward Todd, jun., in certain circles it is believed that I am the author of the letters signed "A. Ross." Will you please be good enough to state that such is not the case, as I have neither the time nor the inclination to write to the press regarding such matters, and cannot see how such a method could possibly rectify them.

The members of the Liverpool O.S. (at headquarters, 64, Shaw Street), also any fanciers who may wish to be present have been promised by Mr. J. S. Clinch, of Liverpool, on Tuesday, January 19th, at 8 p.m., a lecture and discussion on that very interesting subject "Mendelism," writes Mr. Hillmen, joint secretary; this being a new departure, I think, we hope to see a good attendance.

A win at the Jubilee Show will increase the value of an exhibitor's stock by 25 per cent. Exhibitors' attention is invited to the limit and extra stock classes. Hundreds of visitors to the Palace Show come to buy good stock birds at reasonable prices. Hitherto the demand has exceeded the supply. Exhibitors should see that the supply is equal to the demand this year, and enter all their surplus stock in the limit and stock classes.—(ADVT.)

Will you kindly inform your readers, writes Mr. W. R. Murrell, that the cage-bird section of the Spalding Show (January 21st) is being held under C.B.U. rules, with 18 classes, and that, although I have been compelled through pressure of business to give up the secretaryship, I shall personally steward the cage birds? Exhibitors may, therefore, rely upon having their birds well looked after. Entries are short and have been extended to January 18th.

About a month ago I had an advance sample given to me of Fox Bros.' "Egg Food," writes Mr. E. S Lugg (Lewisham), chairman of the Lewisham C.B.S. I have since given this a fair test and find it all that they claim for it. A sixpenny tin contains 50 per cent. of pure egg and 50 per cent. of biscuit, and being so easy to prepare it must certainly revolutionise the fanciers' ways. There is no doubt it will be a boon to the cage-bird Fancy. I hear they (Fox Bros.) are in negotiation with Mr. Ramsden for a stand at the forthcoming Jubilee Palace Show, and should advise fanciers to call and secure a sample tin and so try it for themselves.

"CAGE BIRDS" BLACK CANARY PUZZLE.

Can you solve the Mystery?

Half-guinea cash for the reader who is successful.

A novel picture puzzle appears on our first page this week. In the small squares lie hidden three Canaries, the parts which go to their making having been all jumbled up by our artist. We offer a to the reader who cuts out the squares and pastes them on paper, or cardboard, so arranged as to exactly reproduce the original picture of the three Canaries before it was "jumbled." Each square will be found numbered. The key to the precise arrangement of these squares (as given by the artist) is locked in the Editor's desk. The prize will go to the reader who succeeds in pasting the squares in the same order as appears on this key, the finished whole being a picture, as afore-mentioned, of three Canaries. In the event of none accomplishing this, the prize will go to the effort nearest the said key; or if two or more readers successfully solve the puzzle, to the one who sends in his attempt the most neatly arranged.

One hint we will give competitors. In the puzzle, four squares will be found "missing" at the top left-hand corner, but it must not be thought that they are necessarily to be missing from this particular place in the finished attempt—on the contrary they fit into various parts.

Introduce this fascinating puzzle to all your friends.

All attempts should be packed flat, and must reach us not later than first post, Thursday, January 28th next, when the competition closes.

COPIES OF THE PUZZLE printed on cardboard may be had post free for three-halfpence in stamps, or four copies three-pence post free from the Manager, "Cage Birds," 154, Fleet street, London, E.C.

The "Jubilee" Palace Show will be in a way my coming of age as a judge, writes Mr. H. W. Battye (Huddersfield). it being 21 years on February 18th next since I judged my first show, that show being the first one held by the Windhill Ornithological Society. The committee of management consisted of Messrs. John, Matt, and Miles Broadley, T. Atkinson, E. B. Denton, T. Whitely, with J. K. Pratt as secretary. The principal winners were Messrs. Holmes, Hodgson, M. Broadley, W. Watmough, Chartley Whiting, Sutcliffe, and Tawthorp. There was issued the very modest schedule of 6 classes, 4 for Yorkshires, which had an entry of 61, 1 for Cinnamons with 6 entries, and 1 for Norwich with 9 entries.

"Two Wee Gems."

Mr. Norman's painting, "Two Wee Gems," which appears in this issue, was executed direct from two birds lent for the purpose by that famous breeder and exhibitor of Border Fancy Canaries, Mr. H. Bennet, of Kelso, whose kindness in loaning two such grand birds, and risking the long railway journey to London, we acknowledge with grateful appreciation.

Early or Late?

An unusual find for this time of the year was made by Mr. Richard Baker, who, when going round his fields at Quarry Bank, Little Drayton, discovered a newly-built Thrush's nest, containing four eggs. The nest was left undisturbed, and the hen bird is still to be seen hovering in the vicinity, but it is hardly likely that the eggs will be successfully hatched.

Yorkshire Canary Club.

It will doubtless be of interest to the members and Yorkshire fanciers generally to hear who are the leaders in the various competitions promoted by the Y.C.C. In the 20-guinea Yorkshire Challenge Cup the competition has been very keen (at the end of the 9th round with one to go—Crystal Palace—but two points separate the leaders. Of a possible 135 points, Messrs. Bailey and Swanger have scored 129 points, Mr. W. H. Shackleton 127 points. Mr. E. Radley comes next with 57 points, and Mr. J. Wilcock is fourth with 50 points. The competition for members residing outside Yorkshire: 1st, Mr. W. Broughton (last year's winner), 169 points; 2nd, Mr. G. W. Cuthbertson, 75 points; 3rd, Mr. H. Foden, 31 points. Ramsden's Cup and money specials, up to and including Keighley Show (four still to go): here again the fight has been very keen, there being quite a number of members in the running up to date: 1st, Messrs. Ogden Bros., 61 points; 2nd, M. Peel, 58 points; 3rd, W. Wadsworth (last year's winner). 54 points; 4th, Amblers, 44 points; 5th, H. W. Walsh, 42 points. Intermediate and Novice Competition (smoker's cabinet, etc.): 1st, W. Peel, 54 points; 2nd, H. W. Walsh, 42 points. Novices: 1st, Messrs. Shaw Bros., 24 points; 2nd, J. Robertshaw, 23 points; 3rd, Tom Wood, 18 points. CAGE BIRDS Specials Competition for the amateurs of the Y.C.C.: 1st, H. H. Towers, 31 points; 2nd, Shaw Bros., 24 points; 3rd, J. Robertshaw, 23 points; 4th, P. Drake and Son, 21 points.—JOHN GREAVES, hon. secretary and treasurer.

THE EVOLUTION OF A CANARY.

THIS remarkable series of photographs—we believe it unique—very successfully shows the development of a Canary from the moment of hatching until it reaches the age of twenty-four days. The Roller is the particular member of the Canary family who "sat" for the skilful photographer. In the first picture we see the nestling with part of the egg-shell still on it, and with the down upon its body moist and clotted. At the age of four hours the down has dried, and appears soft and fluffy. The rapidity of the young bird's growth is strikingly evidenced in the succeeding pictures. When it is a week old the coming feathers can plainly be discerned. At nine days the marking ring, it will be seen, has been slipped over its leg; and later it is clearly discernible. At fifteen days the bird is getting well fledged, the tail showing plainly. Traces of the nestling down remain clearly visible about the head even on the seventeenth and twenty-first days. At the twenty-fourth day the young bird is able to look after itself and attend to its own wants.

MY OUTDOOR AVIARY AND ITS INMATES.

By ALFRED LADENBURG.

MY aviary consists of a small glass structure intended originally for a greenhouse, and is built on a small suburban plot of ground. It faces south-west, and is 12ft. long by 8ft. wide by 10ft. high, sloping to 8ft. I have divided it into two compartments of roughly 7ft. and 5ft. The larger division has an open-air flight 6ft. long by 8ft. wide by 12ft. high, and the smaller 6ft. long by 6ft. wide by 8ft. in height. I would have preferred the former flight at any rate longer, but the exigencies of space forbade. In the larger space I keep different representatives of the Weaver and Whydah families; the smaller I reserve for hard-billed, so-called ornamental Finches—the Wax-bills and Mannikins—about all of which I shall presently speak at some length. The floor is partly boarded and well sanded, and partly fresh earth in which grow ferns and ivies, the latter plant being specially suitable for growing in an aviary. The walls of the smaller compartment are hung with a variety of sleeping places, nesting boxes, etc. These, by the way, can easily be made out of old cigar boxes, or from the little cages in which one buys these small birds at the dealers; a cocoanut shell also provides a cosy sleeping place.

In one corner of the larger compartment, with not much trouble and with still less expense, I have erected a rockery made from the waste of brick kilns, technically called "burrs." This rock-work bounds one side of the aviary, and encircles a basin into which a fountain plays; the water also flows down from above in a small cascade. Borders of virgin cork run round the sides, and help to give the aviary a finished and neat appearance. The two flights are turfed, and round the edges are planted geraniums and flowering plants, which I find the birds do not harm in the least. In each flight also is planted a small tree with plenty of branches, and inside there is an abundance of boughs and perches of different kinds. The seed I give in open pans, and the water by means of the fountain and shallow vessels. To sum up, I have tried to provide as much variety as possible in a limited space.

A VIEW OF THE EXTERIOR

An Aviary, built with inexpensive materials, which affords one a glimpse of the splendours of the Tropics.

Now, I am well aware that a glass-house is far from an ideal habitation for birds, being too subject to changes of temperature, the atmosphere being hot in summer, and cold in winter. The open flights and a sun blind, however, partly obviate the first objection, while as to the second I use a gas stove, of which more anon. On the other hand, an advantage of the glass-house is the better light the occupants of such an aviary enjoy, and the corresponding ease with which they may be observed, both in winter and summer.

CONCERNING SOME OF THE INMATES.

Now with regard to the inmates. I confine myself, as I have already said, to the easily procurable seed-eating Finches. I have at present a little over forty birds in all. In the larger portion of the aviary I keep Bishops, resplendent at the present time (September) in their breeding plumage of bright yellow and black; crimson Madagascar Weavers, Masked and Baya Weavers; Paradise and Pin-tailed Whydahs; a Combassou and a red-shouldered Whydah. In the smaller compartment I have Avadavats, Bronze-Wings, Black-headed Nuns, Orange Cheeks, Spice-Birds, Zebra Finches, Zebra Waxbills, Common African Waxbills and Cutthroats; also a pair each of Pectorella and Long-tailed Grass Finches. Far be it from me, however, to suggest that to keep foreign birds it is necessary to do so on as large a scale as this. But anyone who has room for a cage can at least keep one couple of the smaller foreigners, though, of course, the advantage gained by their being allowed room for flight is incalculable.

Now a word as to the desirability of the different kinds. To a novice who has only room or money for one or two pairs, I would unhesitatingly recommend either the Avadavat, the Bronze-Wing, or the Zebra Finch. They are all hardy birds, and cheap, a pair of the two first-named costing as little as 1s. 6d. The Avadavat is a sprightly little bird, and the male, when in colour, is very beautiful in his crimson dress with white specks; he has, too, a sweet, trill-like song. The Bronze-Wing, though perhaps hardly such a pretty bird as the Avadavat when in colour, has a coat which shines in parts with a bright metallic lustre. He is lively to the verge of impudence, and knows no fear. It is a sight to see him disperse a perchful of birds nearly double his size, though his diminutive stature prevents him from doing any mischief. His love-making antics, too, are most comical. Singing vigorously the while, and bracing up his little body, he hops up and down on the same spot a few times, then suddenly makes a furious dart at the object of his affections, who usually flies precipitately to another twig, pursued by the male, who gravely repeats his performance. It may be here noticed, as an interesting fact, that, in common with other Mannikins, his vigorous singing is almost entirely inaudible to our human ears, but no doubt the vocal effort is duly appreciated by his mate. The Zebra Finch, though a trifle more expensive than the two previously mentioned, is also well within the limits of a modest purse. The male is a very beautiful little fellow, and he has a curious little song, which may be almost likened to a fairy bugle note.

THE FOUNTAIN AND THE ROCKERY.

A beautiful effect obtained by a trifling expenditure on waste burrs, ferns and other plants.

I have said nothing of the tiny Zebra Wax-bill with his beautiful reddish, golden breast when in colour; of the Spice-birds with their rich brown markings; of the Ribbon Finch, of the Cut-throat, whose red streak under the chin earns him this ominous appellation, and who possesses a delicious gurgling song; of the Parson or Long-tailed Grass Finches in their delicate harmony of French grey, fawn and black. I may mention that I have also kept Nonpareils, Cordon Bleus, Lavender and Fire Finches, but consider them all rather too delicate for an outdoor aviary, though they would doubtless do well in a warm room. I am afraid, too, the price of the exquisitely lovely Gouldian Finch is beyond the reach of most of us.

THE WEAVER AND WHYDAH FAMILIES.

To come now to the Weavers, etc., I must confess I can hardly write dispassionately of these birds. To anyone with a little more room than the ordinary cage affords I can unhesitatingly recommend them.

The ordinary Weaver is also only a small bird as size goes, about four or five inches in length, but his strength, vivacity and energy make him appear, at least to me, larger. He is hardy to a degree, and regularly changes colour in a most remarkable way, the little brown sparrow-like bird of one season a few weeks later being a gorgeous individual in jet black and buttercup yellow, as in the case of the Bishop, or jet black and crimson, as in the case of the Grenadier and Madagascar Weavers, and so on. His wonderful weaving talents, too, are a never-ending source of interest.

The song of the Weaver is powerful, but harsh and strident; and though certainly not melodious in the ordinary sense, it is quite in keeping with the character of the bird. A near relation of the Weaver is the Paradise Whydah, who, as our autumn approaches (corresponding to spring in South Africa, his native country), besides changing from an inconspicuous light brown flecked with black to a jet black with velvety brown shadings round the throat, dons a tail with two central plumes twelve to fifteen inches long.

The Pin-tailed Whydah, too, though not growing quite such a handsome caudal appendage as his relative the Paradise, changes too, as the nuptial season approaches, into a brilliant black and white. The Combassou or Ultramarine Finch, also a Whydah, grows no tail, but turns into a beautiful dark blue. The Whydahs, unlike the Weavers, possess a melodious warbling song. It must not be forgotten, too, that the breeding season over, these tails and brilliant plumage are alike discarded, only to appear with unfailing regularity again the following year. A bird's moult is wonderful enough at any time, but what shall be said when these ordinary sober-looking individuals are thus transformed?

NOT AN EXPENSIVE HOBBY.

There may be some who, after reading these lines, may be anxious to keep foreign birds, but are afraid of the cost of food, etc., and the trouble involved. I can soon set these doubts at rest by saying that all the birds I have mentioned eat practically nothing but a mixture of canary, inga or niger, and millet seed, a little paddy rice or rice in the ear, and spray millet, of which they are all excessively fond. As regards green food, a good plan is to grow the seed in boxes and give it them to pick over, but they thrive even without it: in fact the only treat my birds (who are in splendid condition) really appreciate is the aphides which infest our rose bushes. Then as regards trouble, beyond the ordinary rules of cleanliness, they require practically no looking after.

With regard to the vexed question of artificial heat in an outdoor aviary, I am strongly in favour of it. Acting under the advice given in the columns of CAGE BIRDS, I bought a Clark's Syphon gas stove, and I have found this answer admirably. It does not vitiate the air, and proof of this is that I hardly lost a bird during the whole of last winter. I try not to let the temperature of the aviary go down much below 50 degrees Fahrenheit, and then the birds can be let out for an hour or two in the flights on even the coldest winter days.

THE HAWFINCH: OUR LARGEST BRITISH SEED-EATER.

THE Hawfinch has of recent years become very popular amongst bird-keepers, and especially those who go in for exhibiting, as a first-class specimen can always be depended upon to win prizes. The bulky form, the huge beak, and the peculiar wing feathers shaped like a bill-hook, are features that distinguish the Hawfinch, which has no song worthy of the name, and no particular mannerisms. It is very, very shy when in a wild state, frequenting wooded districts, and being seldom seen except by keen observers. In captivity it can be got very tame and confiding, becoming much attached to its owner.

THE GOLDFINCH AND ITS MANAGEMENT.

By CHARLES PRIOR.

A Practical Article written to accompany our Coloured Plate, "A Family Party of Goldfinches."

IT may be stated with perfect safety that, so far as readers of Cage Birds are concerned, interest in the wide-spreading ornithological tree centres itself in that branch which relates to those birds which may be kept in cages. It may further be hazarded with certainty that the lovely coloured plate of Goldfinches presented with to-day's issue will act the part of a breeze, creating a stir ot interest throughout the branch, moving the very twigs and leaves to a rustle and a murmur of delight and approval. As a subject of general interest, the Goldfinch stands without a peer. He is to be met with in the cottage, the villa, and the mansion. His classes at our exhibitions are invariably well filled; their vicinity invariably crowded. He is one of the chief centres of attraction, and he excites the admiration and interest alike of the casual visitor, the enthusiastic novice, the full-fledged expert, and the well-seasoned "old stager." He is represented in their own collections, and he never fails to contribute to their pleasure. All this, too, notwithstanding sundry soft impeachments freely brought against him. He is regarded as unfit to be trusted in the same compartment as his mate when eggs are about; he is often freakish and finnicking in matters of diet; he can shuffle off this mortal coil at will; his very nationality is frequently made ground for disputations. But the one thing that remains unimpeached and unimpeachable is his great and undiminished popularity. His sprightliness, his elegance, his docility, the gay contrasts of his colours, his merry song and his confiding ways make up a combination which proves altogether irresistible.

In Mr. Norman's coloured plate, with characteristic skill this artist-fancier has provided a really delightful picture of a family of Goldfinches—father and his mate, and their two offspring. The task of supplying a few remarks upon them has been allotted to me, and if my pen does the subject a mere modicum of the justice it has received from the artist's brush, then no apology is needed.

A LADY AND A GENTLEMAN.

The lower figure on the left side is the cock. But, except for the sake of thoroughness, this observation is superfluous. The ample expanse of blaze alone proclaims that fact. Then the black-coloured portions—notably the wing butts, the "moustache," and the back of the head—are black, without any frosting of grey or rust. The beak is, by comparison, a trifle longer and stouter than that of the hen. The head, looked at in profile, is flatter and more elongated. The general attitude is more "pert," the eye bolder, and the colours more vividly contrasted. Of this particular specimen much more than this may be said. He is, in fact, without being impossibly ideal, a tip-top show bird, point by point. He takes the perch at that pleasing angle which is neither stilty nor crouching. His blaze is large and square, of a level crimson colour, which is rich yet bright, and free from blemish of black spots. The black line which divides the upper from the under blaze is dense, and at the same time desirably narrow. The body colour, a rich clear brown, appears to be nicely distributed as to the breast, and extends along the flank almost to the tail; is solid as to the back, and all but reaches to the black crescent at the back of the head. Colours well contrasted (the lighter parts free from an excess of clouding—a serious fault), a pair of well-buttoned wings, and little is left to wish for.

By his side is his spouse, an unusually brightly coloured little lady, fit and worthy mate of her resplendent partner. Note, however, that the blaze, although of a brightness unusual in hens, is of the usual diminutive size. On the top it barely passes the eye; below it distinctly misses it. Observe also the rounder head, the finer beak, the rustier black, the more compact "habit of growth," the slightly dowdier appearance, the milder eye, and the meeker aspect, and the principal sex differences have been passed under review. It should be added, however, that not always are these differences so well defined as in the bonny couple now under notice. Many undoubted cocks would require considerable brightening up to reach the excellence even of this hen, and some are so near the border line as to cause much perplexity even to experienced fanciers. It would be mere juggling with words to attempt to show how these latter may be recognised. Long and keen observation only can breed the faculty of sexing doubtful ones; and old hands are seldom at fault in their decisions. This faculty has a parallel in the facility with which the sex of pigeons, doves, and very young chickens is determined by those who devote their attention to these interesting creatures. It amounts almost to an instinct.

One of our Australian readers, Mr. A. G. Boardman (North Fitzroy), and some of his pets.

This "happy family" is owned by Mr. A. C. Eley (Kentish Town), who states that the cat will not touch any live bird.

TWO PROMISING BABIES.

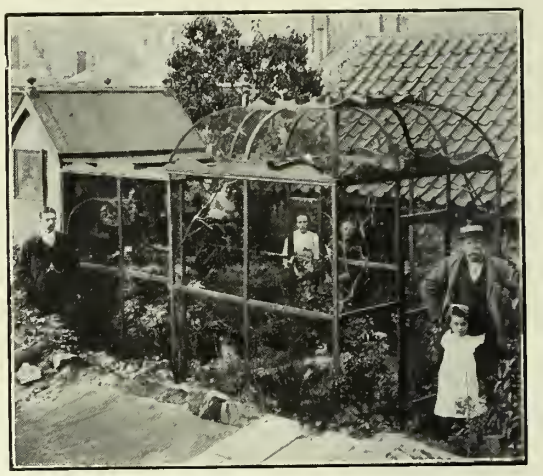
Let us now turn to the remaining two figures in the picture. They are young Goldfinches—otherwise Greypates—and it needs no advanced development of the sexing sense, so to speak, to classify them as cock and hen. Little sister, with becoming modesty, is lingering in the background, and has apparently, with befitting industry, set herself the task of extracting seed from the large thistle head to which she is clinging. Even from the distance her female characteristics are easily discernible. There is the rounder head, the shorter, thinner beak, the docile aspect, and the generally greyer appearance. She is the daughter of her mother.

More prominent in the group we see her brother, Goldie Junior. Here, again, although he is yet in nest feather, we have the sure indications of the cock: the longer head, the stouter beak, the blacker shoulder, the richer yellow wing-bars, the greater general brightness, the bolder eye and bearing. Here, also, is the happy medium of pose we observed in his sire. Here is the broad and rising forehead; here the full and unbroken throat line, indispensable to the display of blaze which is soon to appear. Here are the nicely buttoned wings, neatly folded. Here are the very tickings defined with a sharpness far beyond the average; and always, when so defined, the hall mark of quality and colour. Here, in a word, is a gem; an embryo champion, worthy offspring of such a mating. And here is a word of appreciation for the talented artist; for this admirable rendering in colours of what must be a difficult subject will surely rank as one of his very happiest efforts in bird portraiture.



This pretty aviary, which belongs to Mr. Williams, of Kirkcaldy, shows what may be achieved even in an ordinary back-yard. Some descriptive notes will be found on another page.

WHAT IS THE SOLUTION?

Now to turn in a different direction. Possibly no birdy subject has been more exhaustively treated than the feeding of Goldfinches; and yet the "infallible system" has still to be put on record. There is mystery in it. A dozen Goldfinches may be taken at one snap of the nets. They may all be placed upon exactly the same treatment. Half a dozen will thrive; three will merely exist; three go under. Why is it? Echo answers—why? Why one Goldfinch should be sickly for months on end and then without change of treatment leap into health at a bound is a mystery; why another, who has never ailed at all, should suddenly die without a moment's moping is a mystery; why some few should be able to subsist, and even thrive, for a number of years upon one article of diet only is a mystery—the mystery is so complex that it almost leads one to the conviction that the Goldfinch who has it within him to live cannot be killed, whilst one who "means to die" cannot be saved. Such a conviction, however, must not be entertained. Let us examine a little further.

Wild Goldfinches have access to a very great variety of seeds. Their favourite ones are those of the composite plants—dandelion, groundsel, ragwort, milk-thistle, these are but samples of the host. Then there are the various thistles of autumn; there is knapweed, there is teazel. Tender, delicate seeds, all of these, dainty as the little feeder himself. Easy of digestion, too; of a surety easy of digestion. There is also a great consumption, in season, of minute insect life. Again, easy of digestion: the maximum of nourishment, here, for the minimum of internal effort.

A MENU BY A NOTED CHEF.

Caged Goldfinches are necessarily denied this comprehensive menu. It is beyond the cunning of man to provide it. Substitutes must therefore be resorted to, these being supplemented as freely as may be from Nature's larder. Here is a sensible and feasible interpretation. Stock mixture ("daily bread"): Equal bulk of teazel and linseed, with a sprinkling of Canary seed added. Separate allowance of hemp seed; one teaspoonful daily to each bird. Here are a few very important don'ts. Don't use seeds that have been visited by mice. Don't use seeds that have the slightest trace of mustiness. Don't use inferior seeds. Don't use dusty seeds. So much for the "daily bread"—now for the titbits. Niger, maw and cracked sunflower seeds; dandelion leaves, dandelion seed-heads; groundsel, knapweed and thistle. Small maggots whenever possible. This is no haphazard bill of fare. It may not be strictly scientific, but it will stand these three tests. Any Goldfinch (unless he has already acquired some perverted taste, from which he should be weaned by degrees) will eat it. If he is constitutionally suited for caged life he will digest it. If he digests it he will find it of sufficient feeding value. If it can be further supplemented, by all means let it be.

A word or two now respecting those birds which do not thrive. It has been remarked earlier that there are such. It may be, after all, that the vagaries are no vagaries, and the mystery no mystery. Glance again at the tender and succulent nature of the wild bird's diet, and compare it with the "daily bread" of captivity. It stands to reason that the revised bill of fare puts the bird's powers of assimilation to a very severe test. The result is a matter of constitution. Those whose constitutions rise to the occasion are able to assimilate all that they require, even from their stock mixture. They thrive from the very first and are a source of joy indeed. Many are to be helped over the stile by the liberal allowance of "extras"; only needing time to adapt themselves to the changed conditions.

Some few there are, however, whose digestive organs are unequal to the task of extracting sustenance from the ordinary seeds of commerce. They do well enough for an indefinite period if allowed to entirely satisfy their appetites upon the more delicate fare. But this is not always practicable; and it is when they are compelled to turn their attention to more everyday provender that they begin to droop. They eat heartily, ravenously; but their poor little frames remain unnourished, their bodies unsustained. They are constitutionally unfitted for captive fare, they are a source of continual anxiety, and the best remedy is to choose a suitable time and place and set them at liberty. Whether such as these live long to enjoy their freedom, whether even if never deprived of it they would enjoy long life—who shall say? Dame Nature demands that only the fittest shall survive, and it may well be that this inherent delicacy of constitution condemns them to succumb, in times of stress, under her inexorable law.

It is not to be supposed, however, that the percentage of delicate individuals is in the least an alarming one. On the contrary, it is quite small. Nor is it necessary to take affright at every slight indisposition. There may be a hundred and one trifling ailments to which the most robust subjects are liable. It is difficult—nay impossible—to locate the exact trouble, but in all cases temporary sickness seems to bring about a distaste for food, accompanied by "stomach" troubles. The remedy is simplicity itself. Any Goldfinch which, although ordinarily healthy, is observed to be ailing, should have his appetite tempted by an increased allowance of delicacies. The "daily bread" part of his food supply may be temporarily withdrawn. If the weather is cold, and he is kept in unwarmed quarters, he may be taken to a more genial atmosphere. If fine, he may be placed out of doors, in the sun, out of draught, but not without some shelter. In nineteen cases out of twenty an immediate improvement will occur. When it is seen that he is on the high road to recovery, he must be coaxed back again to his everyday conditions.

THE ELUSIVE BULLFINCH HYBRID:

MY ATTEMPTS TO BREED IT.

By R. JAMES COOK.

I THINK my motto will have to be "Patience," for unless the would-be Mule and Hybrid breeder has more than the usual amount of patience in his composition he will do well to take up some other hobby—say diabolo, or breeding white mice. More years ago than I care to say I went to see the stock of a fancier living not many miles from my native town (Stourbridge), and there I saw, coveted, and finally bought, a Cock Variegated Canary and Goldfinch Mule. It was not an exhibition specimen, but a very lovely and charming bird, which I may say lived and gave pleasure to myself and family for several years, and was then sold to a friend, and did the same for him for, I think, about five years, when it journeyed to that "Bourne whence no traveller returns."

Is it necessary to say that I was bitten with the idea to breed some like him? But I may as well at once say that I have never bred a Canary-Goldfinch Mule as good as my first purchase. Reliable light Muling hens are very scarce, and if "proved" are no means easy to part from their owners, or to be got cheap; I know I should want a good round sum for a hen which I knew had thrown a good light Mule. Dark Canary Mules are comparatively easy to get; a big Finch and a good big Yellow variegated Norwich hen will do the trick as easily as anything worth having in this world is usually to be got, but now I am going to "cut the cackle and come to the hosses"—that is to say,

HYBRIDS BETWEEN TWO BRITISH BIRDS.

Somewhere about fifteen years ago I went to a Bird Show at Birmingham (held, I think, at the "Crown Hotel"), where I saw a very fine Goldfinch-Bullfinch Hybrid exhibited by Messrs. Houlton and Chisnall. This bird fired my ambition; was the means of making me take up the breeding of Hybrids. It was a truly grand specimen, of fine size and lovely colour. At that time my bird room was over the kitchen, facing due South. I procured two Bullfinch hens, about Christmas time, and ran a Goldfinch with one, and a Brown Linnet with the other—in separate cages, of course; and, I may say, home made cages, for I was not at that time able to spare much money for investment in swellish fittings. A box from the grocers and a bit of straight tinned wire, combined with not too clumsy fingers will provide a useful breeding cage for sixpence. This has the great advantage of being not too expensive to smash up for firewood when it gets dirty, and a hunting ground for red mite, as all cages will, no matter what they cost. Don't buy a small box; it should be at least two feet six inches long by one foot three inches high by ten inches deep. If a bit larger it will be none the worse, for over-fatness, soft-shelled eggs, and many other evils arise from small cages; and in Hybrid breeding you will encounter enough difficulties without these.

Well, I had my two pairs of Hybrid breeders, and, of course, the rest was simple—or, at least, to my simple mind appeared so. Alas! one's best laid schemes "gang aft agley." Goldfinches and Bullfinches have a knack of speedily making up their minds to depart to their "Happy Hunting Grounds." This is what my Goldfinch did in about the month of March; and the hen Bullfinch not long after him. Never mind, I still had the Linnet and hen Bully, and went on my way, if not rejoicing, at least with a determination to see what they would do. How carefully I tended them! The best of canary and rape seeds were theirs, and, in the early spring, tit-bits of hemp, maw, niger, and teazel. Then when the dandelions began to show I gave them the newly sprouting heart and a bit of the root as well. Later came the blossoms, which you will find they enjoy immensely; then, later still, the seeding heads. Give plenty of these, for I believe they are a most excellent food, and if you will carefully notice the birds out in the fields I am sure you will be convinced, from the eager manner in which they devour them, that they, too, consider them excellent.

Just a word of caution here, if you are a married man, and your room is in the house (as mine was then). You will remember when you were a child blowing the seed from the dandelion heads. We used to call them "One o'clocks," because it only usually took one puff to blow them all out. Well, if you take twenty or thirty heads a day into your bird room, you won't be long getting a pile of "fluff" there, I can assure you. And some day, when you have the door and window open, you may see a cloud of dandelion fluff sailing down the stairs and into the bedrooms. If that should happen, then make your peace with the "Good Lady" as best you can! One may minimise this trouble to a great extent by cutting off the "fluffy" part just above the seed with a pair of scissors. It is best to pick the heads just before they open out.

GREENFINCH-BULLFINCH HYBRID AT THE AGE OF FIFTEEN DAYS.

The flowering heads of groundsel, the seeding heads of the sow or milk thistle, the buds of the hawthorn, crab apple, fruit bushes, etc., or, in fact, anything in the usual green food line will be "received with thanks," and more especially if infested with green fly, or blight (aphides). If you can get any live ants' eggs try the hen Bullfinches with them; but be careful there are no live ants among them, or you will soon be involved in more trouble with the "Missus." I have had Bully hens, too, which were very partial to a small live mealworm.

Don't forget to crush the egg-shells after you have eaten any eggs for your breakfast, and a piece of cuttle fish bone will also be of great service, while sharp grit, of course, you will see the birds have regularly. These things help greatly to ensure properly shelled eggs. Some hen Bullfinches will eat a bit of egg food; try them, it can't do harm. The cock will most likely not look at it twice. But the natural seeds as they ripen will do most good, such as shepherd's purse, plantain, seedy chickweed, and ripe or unripe dock. Last, but by no means least, we have white sunflower seed, which you would do well to slightly crack by rolling a bottle, or the rolling-pin, over it a time or two.

Now let us see how the Linnet and Bully got on. I may say that the Linnet was a house-moulted bird, and therefore fairly steady. At first there were quarrels, but not serious ones. The Linnet did not take much notice of the widely open beak and threatening manner of his lady, and there was no cowardice on his part, which I find is good promise of a better understanding later on. Towards the end of May I was pleased to see the hen asking in her own way to be fed by her husband. A little later she was busy carrying a bit of dry greenstuff about. Then I thought it time to supply a nest-box and some nesting material. I find hen Bullfinches like something fairly strong to build with. I usually cut some coir rope up for them, into lengths of about 3 in., and thoroughly teaze it out.

All went well, and one morning I was delighted to find an egg—not in the rather roughly made nest, but on the floor of the cage. It was uninjured. I carefully removed it, in hopes of more. Nor was I disappointed. She laid six in that batch; only one in the nest. I was fortunate enough to save them all, and also fortunate enough to have ready a hen Canary to put them under. She sat them, but, woe is me! not one was fertile. I should have said that the hen Bully gave no signs of wanting to sit, nor did she ever do so. After she had laid the last egg of her first batch I cleaned out the cage of all nesting material, and nest-box, in the hope that she would have a rest for a few days.

In about a week signs were not wanting that she was ready to go to nest again. I replaced the nest-box and gave nesting material. She built another nest, rather more roughly constructed than the first one. I took the liberty of changing it for one more to my mind, which had been built by a hen Canary and not used. This was done after she had laid the first egg of her second batch on the cage bottom. Again she laid six eggs, but not quite consecutively, and again gave no signs of wanting to sit, although I tempted her with four Canary eggs (unfertile), which I had saved for the purpose. To make things worse, I had no Canary going to nest at that time under which I could put her eggs, except one which had killed (sweated) a family of her own.

WITH THE FANCIERS OF FAR-AWAY AUSTRALIA.

This photograph was taken at the "send-off" given to Mr. W. Elliott on leaving for a distant State. The guest of the evening is holding the silver tea and coffee services, which were presented to him. Seated on his right is Mr. Hagg, President of the Victorian C. S., and on his left Mr. J. Wales, President of the Crest Club and Mr. G. Ward, President of the North Suburban C. S., the Societies concerned in the presentation. Mr. Elliott was the originator of young stock shows in the State of Victoria and also of uniform show cages.

AN OUTDOOR STOCK CAGE FOR BRITISH BIRDS.

By CHARLES BURROWS.

THE two photos which are published herewith show the cage open, as it is during the day, and closed, as it is through the night. It is both weather and cat-proof, and this is saying a great deal. I think most fanciers who have kept British birds will agree with me that such do much better outdoors than in any kind of bird-room, providing one has a sheltered place and suitable cages for them. Cats we shall always have to contend with, and these being "domestic animals" you need to be careful. The following plan will do away with all risk of hurting the cats, and will effectually keep them away from your birds after they have once "gone through the mill." To make the trap for catching them is not much trouble; you want four boards 30 in. long. Two of these are for the sides, and should be 9 in. wide, and the other two are for the top and bottom, and should be 7 in. wide. Nail these together box shape, and at one end fix iron rods strong enough to keep the cat in at the other end. You want a sliding lid, and to do this you must cut the top board 2 in. shorter than the sides and bottom. Then nail two strips on each side for the lid to work up and down in, and wide enough apart for it to work easy.

You have now to arrange the trigger, which is very simple. Bore a 1-in. hole in the top of the trap about 6 in. from the end with the iron rods in. This hole is to put the hook through to carry the bait, this hook to be made similar to a mouse-trap trigger, only so much stronger and larger. Then fasten a bit of stout wire across the hole to carry the trigger. The lid at the other end will also want a small hole in it about 3 in. from the bottom, so that when the lid is up this hole will be on a level with the top of the trap. A strong bit of wire will now be wanted, some 8 in. long, with an eye at one end, so that it can be connected with the trigger with string; the point of the wire goes into the hole of the lid to hold it up when set. Two small staples will be wanted to keep this wire in its place along the top of the trap, which must be allowed to work easily. Bait the hook with a fish, and no cat can resist the temptation to go in for it. As she pulls the fish the lid drops down behind her. Dash two or three buckets of water over her through the end of trap, and then let her go. This particular cat will not trouble you again. You may see her on some distant wall, but come near your trap again? Never.

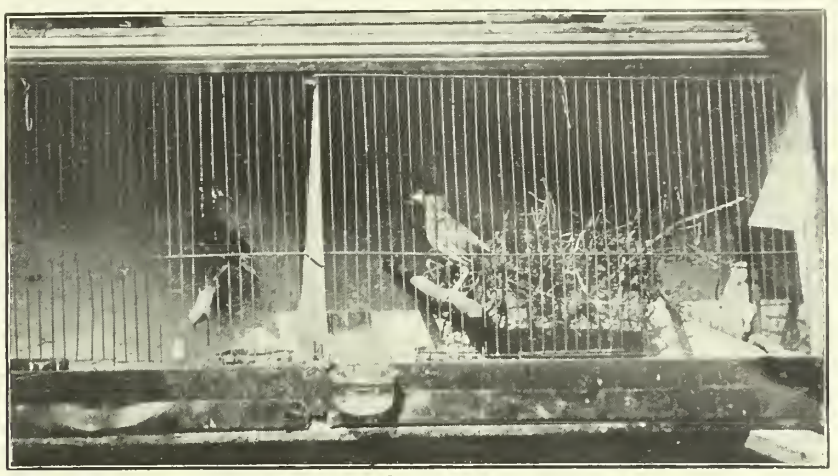
When making this cage the chief things I intended it to cope with were the weather and the cats. Also, I wanted to make it easy to feed and water the inmates, and easy to clean out; to give as little or as much space as the different birds might require, and to be able to catch any bird I wanted without handling it. I don't purpose to go into all the details and measurements of the cage; I hope the pictures will make it plain to anyone who is interested, or who is likely to build on the same lines. I commenced with seven 1-in. grooved and tongued boards, each 14 ft. long and 7 in. wide. I used the full length. Of course, I could have had longer boards, but this length suited my place. I used three boards for the back, which made it 21 in. high, and two boards for the top and bottom, which made it 14 in. deep. At one end is fitted a catch box with two sliding doors and a wire front; the other end is plain. When I had got thus far I made two tressels for it to stand on. Then I had to get enough corrugated iron for the roof, 18 in. deep. This is rather a difficult size to get, so I had some 3-ft. sheets cut into two. A strip of wood, say, 1 in. thick, nailed along the front of cage on top will be found to give the required fall for rain.

I have divided my cage into six sections. Two uprights are wanted at each division, and these must be set wide enough apart for the dividing board to run in. A strip of board 3 in. deep is used between these uprights, fixed to the bottom of cage. Holes are cut through these strips to allow water and food tins to be pushed in from the front; these can be made of any size to suit the owner, mine being 2 by 1½ and 6 in. long. The fronts are in wood frames, each one hangs on two hinges from the top, and is fastened at the bottom with a button. The shutters also hang on two hinges from the top, and when down are fastened with a button. These shutters serve several purposes: they keep out the cold through the night, and the birds are safe from cats, owls, etc.; they can be set open at any angle to keep back rain and cold winds; they also give shade in the summer. The fronts and shutters open independently of each other. Each section is fitted inside with a glass dish for grit, and two perches, all fastened to the back of cage. The dividing boards are made from ½-in. whitewood, which warps very little; they are not painted, but are well oiled with colza oil.

I have had several aviaries and bird-houses, but none has suited my purpose like this one. It is easy to make, and anyone who has an ordinary amount of spare time would not be long making it.



SONG THRUSHES WHICH BRED IN A CAGE.
This pair of Thrushes are photographed in the ordinary breeding cage used; the nest is clearly to be seen. In another column their owner, Mr. W. Downing, fully describes the Interesting occurrence.

A VISIT TO THE BASS ROCK.

By T. MALLOCH.

WE are swinging in the stern of the "Bonnie Doon" across a long gentle swell towards the towering cliffs of the Bass Rock.

As we pass under the dark rock wall, washed at its base by the green water, the tumult of the winged multitude fills the air, and high overhead a network of birds hangs round the cliffs. Chief among these birds, both in number and in size, is the Gannet, but many screaming Kittiwakes circle round their lofty homes, and Guillemots spin back and forth with arrow-like flights. A closely packed row of the latter birds on one particular ledge seems a permanent feature of the place. Now we are passing the caves, one of which goes right through to the other side of the rock. Passing the other entrance to the cave, where a few "Shags," or Green Cormorants nest, we reach the landing, having circumnavigated the rock. We note the ingenious landing tackle, and having gathered our belongings together (not forgetting the provision basket), we ascend to the lighthouse.

The first sight that delights us is the comical little Puffins watching us from every window and opening in the old ruins of the Fort. They seem quite tame, and are very pretty in their black and white dresses, coral red legs and large, coloured beaks. Our object is to photograph Gannets and so, following our instructions, we descend cautiously "where the smell is strongest," this point being easily found. One staid old bird especially gives every opportunity for a photograph as it sits with beak pointing to the rock and tail outwards, motionless except for a regular movement of the head. Most of the birds have young, as it is the month of July, but several Gannet's eggs are seen lying in the large seaweed nests, and one Guillemot's egg lies on an inaccessible ledge.

A splendid view of the British Fleet is obtained, and a submarine rises and approaches the rock, while others are soon observed in the distance. As these come nearer (they are long shallow objects on the surface, showing a slight disturbance in the neighbourhood of their propellors), hundreds of Gannets leave the rock and circle round above them, the only explanation being that the birds mistake them for whales, and therefore suppose that fish will be found in the vicinity. We are told by the lighthouse keeper that when Guillemots or Puffins are seen diving busily, the Gulls gather round, knowing that a shoal of fish is there, and that many of them will be frightened to the surface by the diving birds.

The distinctive cries of the different species are almost drowned in the total volume of sound. We just catch from time to time the syllables "Kittiwak, Kittiwak," uttered distinctly and deliberately far down the cleft, before they are swallowed up in the loud, vigorous "Gurra, Gurra, Gurra," of a great Gannet landing close at hand.

SONG THRUSHES BREEDING IN CAPTIVITY.

By W. DOWNING.

We are happy to say that in their last attempt our pair of Thrushes succeeded in hatching out one young bird. Both birds were hand-reared, and came from the same nest, in fact. The hen began to feed at once on gentles, and bread and milk mixed with crushed hemp. I was away on a journey, and my wife, who is the better fancier of the two, says the hen totally ignored its usual food, but would pick up a gentle while she stood close by the cage to watch. It would carry it to the nest, making a somewhat similar noise to that of the barn-door fowl when she is feeding her chicks. Then it would drop the gentle into the youngster's beak as though it had been in the habit of doing the same all its life.

My wife went first thing the following morning to see how the young one was getting on, when she was astounded to find it dead and partly eaten on the floor of the cage, evidently by a mouse. So our hopes were again dashed, and now we can only wait until next spring, and then have another try, with a mouse-proof cage front.

I think that when you can get Thrushes to mate and breed in an ordinary double Canary breeder, there cannot be any cruelty in keeping birds in a cage if you study their needs. I am sure our birds appear as happy as the day is long, and I think Mr. Law's case and our own are a complete answer to the faddists who cry out so about the cruelty of keeping our feathered pets in cages, and who at the same time, and in all probability, every day wear some part of a bird in their hats. I think it would be better if they studied the habits of our songsters in freedom, and then gave us, who have not the same opportunities, the benefit of their knowledge as to how the birds feed in their freedom, etc. Then we could do better still.

Most of these super-sensitive people either live in the country or in the far-away suburbs where there is bird life in abundance, and consequently plenty of birdie melody each season. We folk, who are penned up in cities cannot get out to hear them there, so we borrow one or two, when we get the opportunity, so that they may sing to us in our homes, and remind us of the days we spent in the country

There is the slaughter of the innocents which begins on the 12th of September each year. How many of these poor birds have to be knocked up out of the coverts before our nobility and gentry can get a shot at them? And, if they have good luck, they may do to death about a thousand birds in a day. They call this sport; I call it slaughter, and altogether different to our keeping a bird to the very best of our ability, enjoying its lithesome singing, reminding us of scenes that are fairer, and air that is purer, than that we get in our big cities.

On page 23 is a photo. of the Thrushes in the breeding cage. Readers will see that the glass drinkers are placed opposite the holes that were made to cover the egg drawers. The birds have been seen frequently by Mr. J. Steele, a member of the committee of the Manchester and Northern Counties O.S. They have also been seen from time to time by another committeeman, Mr. J. Hughes, also by Mr Parker and other members of our society and friends.

CANARY QUERIES.

Seed Samples.

H. Green.—There is so little to choose in the samples you enclosed that I cannot really say which would be best to feed your birds on. But as all are bad, or, anyway, of very poor quality, I would say use neither, but try to get at least a fairly average quality of seed. Both samples of so-called rape appear to be a mixture of rape-like seeds, except that the grains are too dark in colour for summer rape, and instead of having a mild nutty flavour are quite "mustardy." Canary No. 1 is extremely small and thin, and, although sweet, is practically little more than husk. Canary No. 2 is a trifle larger and plumper, but still quite inferior, and is, in addition, of very doubtful flavour. I cannot advise you to use either sample for feeding your birds.

Affected Eye.

Yo Sam.—You do not give sufficient particulars for me to form a very decided opinion on the cause of your birds going blind in one eye. Were the birds all caged together, or with other birds; and are you quite satisfied that the eyes were not injured, firstly, by an accident, or in a quarrel with one another? Then, what symptoms are exhibited before the blindness becomes apparent? Is there any swelling of the area around the eye, or any discharge of any kind from the eye? The replies to these questions would help one to form an opinion on the case. If not the result of any injury, it may possibly be ophthalmia, which may be contracted by one bird from another occupying the same cage, so that your method of isolating all affected birds is a wise precaution. Keep them warm, and perfectly free from any chill or draught, and if there is any swelling around the eye, bathe it for a few minutes once a day with a warm lotion composed of half a teaspoonful of boracic acid and five or six drops of laudanum dissolved in a teacupful of warm water. Prepare it fresh each time as required. Dry gently, and then drop in the eye one drop of zinc lotion, made by dissolving one grain of sulphate of zinc in half an ounce of rosewater. Any chemist will prepare this for you for a very small sum.

Seed Sample and Aviary.

Novice, 40.—The sample of Canary was of very fair quality, but a trifle small. It had also a small proportion of husks or grains which appeared to have been broken or nibbled; therefore you should satisfy yourself that it is not being damaged or soiled by mice. If this is not the case, then the seed is certainly a nice sample. The rape is a very excellent sample, and, in fact, quite the best sample of rape I have examined for a very long time. As regards the shed you are turning into an aviary, you should calculate its accommodation on the basis of one square foot of floor space for each bird the size of a Norwich Canary. You say the floor surface of your place is 47 feet. If you mean 47 square feet, then 50 birds, not more, would be a "full house," without any breeding going on. If you wanted to breed, a stock of ten or twelve birds would be ample, or say, three cocks and nine hens—assuming the birds are to fly loose, as appears to be your intention. If the expense is no consideration it would be a decided advantage to board the floor, and in doing so raise it a few inches from the ground, as this would make it considerably drier and damp proof below. In addition to this, cover it with sharp sand, such as builders use, to a depth of four or six inches, in preference to ashes.

Non-Singing Yorkshire.

Andrews.—If it is a 1908 bird I should rather doubt its being a cock if it had not begun to sing yet since moulting, even though it might have twittered to some extent previous to moulting. Your feeding is none too suitable for one thing. See that its cage is quite free from red mites, and feed and treat it as advised to "Rustique" in this issue for two or three weeks. If this treatment does not bring it on to singing, and it still appears to keep healthy, I should say you may safely write it down a hen.

Worn Threadbare.

H. Townsend.—I suspect the two birds you write about are old ones, and, perhaps, did not moult last autumn. In the latter case they will probably moult in a few weeks' time. You should have said how you feed and treat them. See reply to "The Dumpling" in this issue, and treat both your hens in all respects as advised for the hen in the reply referred to. Also see first of all whether insect pests are the cause of the trouble, and if any are found deal with them as advised in another reply. A bath in which a few crystals or permanganate of potash—just enough to turn the water a slight pink tinge—have been dissolved, may also do good. Candidly I would hardly advise you to keep these birds for breeding, especially if they are old ones.

Wheeze and Moult.

G.S.Y.—You do not say whether the bird moulted at the proper time last autumn. If it did not you must let this moult follow the natural course. Keep the bird fairly warm, but more especially guard it against draughts and violent changes. Feed on a staple of three parts Canary to one part of summer rape; twice a week give a few grains of hemp, and a grain or two of linseed, and every second day give half a teaspoonful of egg food, or crushed sponge cake with a pinch of maw mixed with it each time. Give a little green food when available free from frost; at other times a little sweet juicy fruit. Give a bath two or three times a week in mild weather, but see the bird does not get a chill after it. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whisky, ten of syrup of squills, and two of oil of eucalyptus, well shaken together, every second day until the wheezing ceases, and after that you may with advantage give twenty drops of chemical food every second day until the moult is over. As the snow season is at an end you may dispense with the trouble of colour feeding.

In the Kitchen.

G. L.—If all your birds are not similarly affected with the wheezing, you may take it as a pretty safe indication that this Yorkshire cock either hangs in a position where it is exposed to draught sometime or other—perhaps from the opening and shutting of a door, or a window—or otherwise it is kept too near the fire, where the already considerable variation you name exists in a still greater or exaggerated form, due to the birds having the heat of the fire by day to contend with. See that it is kept in a place quite free from draught, and well away from the fire, so that the difference between the day and night temperatures will be reduced to a minimum. Then feed on a mixture of three parts Canary to one part summer rape as a staple, give half-a-teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake or egg food with two drops of sherry and one drop of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it twice a week, and on two other days a few grains only of inga seed. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whisky, five of dandelion juice, and two of oil of eucalyptus, well shaken together every second day for a fortnight, and on the alternate days twenty drops of chemical food. A scrap of green food, if free from frost, may be given two or three times a week.

Mate for Crest.

Ruhtra.—I certainly would not advise you to start double-crest mating with birds of which you know nothing but hearsay about this breeding. If your bird's crest is of good shape and substance, well radiated, and free from breaks and splits, or bald patches underneath, its small size is not of so much moment as it would be if it was also badly shaped. Mate it with a good feathery Crested which possesses a large dome-shaped skull, short beak, a good wide, square-shaped entrance at base of beak, and as much headgear as possible. If the length of head feather makes it appear horny at the back, and the frontal feather shows a tendency to turn over the nostrils so much the better. With such a mate you should be able to produce some good birds, even though your bird's crest is small. Of course, you must get the nearest you can to this description falling the ideal one.

Method of Heating.

Roller.—As to whether your Rollers will take any harm by being kept in a spare bedroom without any artificial heat depends a good deal upon how they have been previously treated, and also the locality of the room. For instance, if the birds have not hitherto been kept in a high temperature, and the suggested room is situated over a kitchen or other room where a fire is kept burning, I should say they would be far better without any heat at all. If, however, they have been used to a high temperature you may have to continue it to some extent. Let the appearance of the birds guide you in the matter. As regards the best simple method of heating I should say a portable hot-water coil heated by a gas jet would be decidedly the best in your case. Place the coil in the middle of the room on a fire brick or two and connect it with the gas bracket by a length of compo piping.

On the Sick List.

T. Carragher.—You ought to have said how you feed the bird and also where you keep it—whether in a warm or cold room; and if you had cut out the reply you are following and enclosed it, it would have been a help, as I have not the issue by me, and cannot remember every reply that appears from week to week. Try what a fortnight of the following treatment will do for it. Keep it in a comfortable, equable temperature, perfectly free from draughts, and see that it is not worried by mites. Feed on plain Canary seed only as a staple, and twice a week give half a teaspoonful of summer rape. Every second day give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with two drops of sherry and one drop of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and give a small piece of banana three times a week instead of green food. In the drinking water give five drops of dandelion juice and as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence for two days, and afterwards given twenty drops of whisky, five each of glycerine and syrup of squills, and two of oil of eucalyptus, well shaken together, two days in every three for the first week, and every alternate day in the second week. During the second week you may also give twenty drops of chemical food on the alternate days. Remember, it is useless giving remedies without first taking steps to remove the cause.

Pecking Their Feathers.

Workman.—Perhaps you have not gone about the search for red mites in the right way. Look carefully all over the surface of the cages, especially near any small joint or crevice. If you find a fine white, powdery substance adhering about the surface anywhere you may be quite sure there exists a colony of mites hard by. Carefully probe any hole or crack with a pin, scraping it out on to white paper, and you will doubtless soon drop on to the troublesome pest. If any are found, place the birds in a temporary abode, give them a bath daily with a few quassia chips soaked in it; then saturate the vacant cages with paraffin; when it is dry repeat the dose, and afterwards thoroughly clean and overhaul them, and allow to become quite dry before returning the birds. Feed on a staple of Canary seed only, and give only the few extras frequently advised in this column in addition. Give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence and six drops of lemon-juice in the water for a day or two, and after that twelve drops of chemical food daily for a week or so.

Laying Hen and Mating.

A. Sharp.—1. You are feeding the hen too liberally, and keeping her in the kitchen may perhaps be also keeping her too warm, so that she is practically in breeding condition all the time. Keep her as far away from the fire as possible, consistent with avoiding draughts from doors or windows, so that the heat will not vary so much day and night. Feed her on a staple of Canary seed only with a pinch of rape, given separately, twice a week; and once a week a few grains only of niger. Give a spray of green food three times a week when you can get it quite free from frost. In the drinking water give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence two or three times in the first week. 2. To get the lightest possible birds from the green and cinnamon cocks you would need to mate them with clear hens, with perfectly clear underflue, and with a large proportion of clear blood in their veins. If they have been bred from double-clears for a few generations so much the better. Even then you will probably get at least fifty per cent. of heavily marked birds from the green. A good deal, however, depends upon how the green and cinnamon have been bred.

What is the Pip?

Linnet.—The pip, sir, is very much of a meaningless term which is used to describe various conditions which the owner of the bird affected cannot understand, but in the majority of cases it is believed to consist of a hardened scale on the tip of the tongue, or an inflamed and swollen condition of the oil gland over the tail. The general opinion is pretty equally divided on these two points. In very many cases the oil gland itself is believed to be an abnormal growth, and is pricked and squeezed when there was absolutely nothing the matter with it, and the bird is done more or less serious injury. If the gland was really inflamed and contained pus when your friend pricked it, the procedure would be quite correct and relieves the condition, and a little anointing with cold cream, and a pinch of Epsom salts in the water for a day or two would have made things all right. Probably also anointing the gland with cold cream or carbonised vaseline would have been quite sufficient to save any other interference. Glad to hear you find "Canary Breeding for Beginners" is helpful.

All About Rollers.

R. W. Yearsley.—I'm afraid this column is not sufficiently elastic for me to give full particulars of the general treatment and management of Rollers. If you look through a very few back numbers you will find full details as to feeding given several times, and also several long articles in the other parts of the paper. There is really no necessity to make any difference at all in the feeding of imported and British-bred birds. Briefly the staple diet should be two parts Canary to one part summer rape, with a few grains of hemp twice a week, a small teaspoonful of egg food, or sponge cake, twice a week, and a little green food on each of the other days. As regards keeping the cage free from mites. Do you mean the wood bar cages in which Germans are usually imported? If so, the best way to deal with them is to plunge them bodily overhead in a copper or bucket of boiling water for a few minutes every now and again. An excellent method of dealing with other cages is given in another reply this week. By the bye, the tiny wooden cages mentioned are quite too small to keep a bird in regularly.

A Long Silence.

"Rustique."—Most cocks, when mated, drop off full song when the hens have gone to nest, but as yours has not resumed his singing since last spring your management must be at fault somewhere. Look carefully to draughts and extreme fluctuations of heat. It is very probable that, the birds being kept in a kitchen, you may find the fault here. Do you not keep them near the fire, but where the heat will vary as little as possible day and night, and where it is also perfectly free from draughts? Feed on a mixture of three parts Canary to one part summer rape as a staple, and give in addition separately a few grains only of hemp once a week, a few grains of niger on one other day; and twice a week, on two other days, give a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with a few grains of gold of pleasure seed sprinkled over it. Give a few grains of Epsom salts in the water for two or three days, and afterwards give twenty drops of chemical food every second day for a fortnight; and twice each week give four drops of tincture of steel. Continue this until the bird is coming nicely into song, and then reduce the extras by one-half until the beginning of March, which will be quite early enough to begin to prepare for mating.

Tattered and Torn.

The Dumpling.—Am afraid the birds are being kept either in a draughty place or in one where there are extreme, and perhaps rapid, variations of temperature. See these points are properly attended to, and keep the birds in a fairly warm, but not overheated, temperature, where the warmth is equable night and day. Treat the Yorkshire cock the same as advised to "F. T. Worthington" in this issue. Feed the hen the same with following exceptions: omit the cod liver oil from the sponge cake, and instead of gold of pleasure seed, give a third part of a teaspoonful of maw seed in the sponge cake each time; and instead of the medicine advised, give five drops of aromatic sulphuric acid and as much chlorate of potash in the water twice a week as will cover a sixpence. The hen may possibly moult off as soon as the weather gets mild, but if she does not, you will have to wait until the summer moult before her appearance is materially altered. I would not advise you to attempt to force her into moult now, any more than the above treatment will help in that direction. With the treatment you say you give the cages, red mite cannot possibly have anything to do with the trouble.

Drooping Wings.

Amateur Fancier.—In addition to the staple diet of plain Canary seed, give the birds half a teaspoonful of summer rape twice a week, and on two other days a few grains only of niger seed. Every third day for a fortnight give each bird half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake or egg food with two drops of sherry and one drop of cod liver oil emulsion, well mixed together. If you cannot get green food quite free from frost, give a little sweet juicy fruit two or three times a week. See that the cages are free from insect pests, keep clean, free from draughts, and supply gritty, clean sand regularly. In the drinking water give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence for two days, and afterwards give twenty drops of whisky, five of dandelion juice, and two each of tincture of gentian and tincture of steel each alternate day for a week. Give pure water on the intervening days.

Cages v. Flights.

A. W. K.—No rule is without its exception; not even the general one of considering it best, for obvious reasons, to place the young bird in flight for a few months as soon as they are quite able to look out for themselves, and hold their own in company. The flight gives them far more natural exercise, and enables them to develop and make up a good sound frame and muscle much better than keeping them in single small cages. Taken altogether, it is therefore far the best plan to keep them in as large flights as possible until the moult is about to commence. The exceptions where it is, unfortunately, not advisable to adopt this plan are where the young, or any particular individuals, are spiteful and vicious, and much addicted to feather plucking; in the case of Lizards, where much plucking is rumous to the bird's prospects on the show bench; or such birds as good Crests which appear in danger of having the crest continually plucked. All such as these are best caged singly.

Bald and Irritable.

Maud Freeman.—Your diet is decidedly bad, so that it may probably be the cause of the bird's irritable state, and the bald patch on the head is not unlikely to be a natural defect. Still you should carefully examine the bird to see if it is infested with grey lice, and the cage to see if red mite are the cause of the mischief. For methods of unearthing these pests, and destroying them, see replies to other querists. Feed on plain Canary seed only, and give separately half a teaspoonful of summer rape twice a week; on two other days a few grains of hemp, or inga, or crushed oats, one or the other, or first one and then the other, but not altogether; and on two other days give half a teaspoonful of egg food, or a small piece of bread and milk as a substitute. A spray of watercress may be given three times a week if quite free from frost. A mealworm each day for a time would also prove very beneficial. Give all the extras alternately, so a fresh one is given on each day. In the drinking water for the first three days give twenty drops of whisky, five of dandelion juice, as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence, and the same quantity of Epsom salts. After that give it every second day for another week, and on the alternate days four drops of aromatic sulphuric acid. To try to induce him to bathe remove his drinker for two or three hours, then sprinkle a few drops of water over him, and put in a bath. After trying him a few times he will probably finish the operation voluntarily. Be careful he is not exposed to draughts soon after bathing.

The Old, Old Story.

F. T. Worthington.—Although you say you do not think the bird is in a draught, I have no hesitation whatever in saying this has been almost, if not quite, the sole cause of the bird's trouble. I doubt whether it will ever regain all its singing powers, as its elongated claws show that it is no longer a youngster. A bird kept in an all-wire cage, hung in a window, which is opened at times, is always an object for sympathy, as you would doubtless soon conclude if you exposed your face or hand in the same position in various conditions of weather. It is practically impossible for a bird so placed to be secure from draughts. Now, as a preliminary to treatment, either move the cage into the room where it will be quite free from draughts, or, better still, keep it in a box-pattern cage, hung on the wall. Keep it in a fairly comfortable and equable temperature. Feed on a mixture of two parts Canary to one part summer rape seed as a staple. Twice a week give separately a few grains of hemp, and every second day half-a-teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with two drops of sherry and one drop of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it, and once a week sprinkle a few grains of gold of pleasure over it. Give green food, grit, bath, and attend to cage cleaning as now. In the drinking water dissolve as much Epsom salts for the first three days as will cover a sixpence. After that give twenty drops of chemical food every second day (on the days when you do not give sponge cake), and on the alternate days four drops of tincture of steel. Continue this until the feathers cease dropping. Then decrease the sponge cake to twice a week, drop out the sherry and oil, and in the water give ten drops of glycerine, and five each of syrup of squills and aromatic sulphuric acid two or three times a week for a time, or until it begins to try its voice. Shorten the long claws with a sharp pair of nail scissors as often described here. Cannot tell whether the Canary would imitate the Goldfinch's notes; it depends upon the individual so much.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

In an Aviary.

Peter Culshaw.—1. Hardbills would thrive in the building you describe, but I don't think you would get any pleasure out of keeping them loose therein, if, that is, you have no outside flight. You would never be able to see them properly. When you looked in through the window, they would fly up into the roof; and when you went inside they would be very nervous and dash wildly about. You should try another plan; plenty of splendid designs of aviaries in CAGE BIRDS' book on the subject. 2. Yes; all these species "feed as Finches," as you put it. As a matter of fact they really are all Finches. 3. I have dealt with the feeding of Softbills many times recently, and of Blue Tits only last week. Couldn't you look these answers up? See reply to an enquirer about Woodlarks last week. Snow Buntings care for very little beyond plain Canary seed. They get to like a mealworm; also a little insectivorous food.

Storing Privet Berries.

F.M.Y.—If you can get a supply of the material grapes are packed in when they reach the fruiterers in boxes, you will find privet berries will keep for a long time stored away in the same. Don't crowd the bunches together, and keep in a dry cold spot. I have also kept them for lengthy periods covered entirely over with sand (ordinary bird sand), burying the bunches in it. If part of the branch is cut, and the stem is immersed in the neck of a bottle containing soft water, this method also keeps the berries fresh for a considerable period.

'Gales, Mealworms and Fat.

Gale.—Some people will blame mealworms for anything and everything. Nightingales which hardly ever see a mealworm will get undesirably fat just the same as will those that get into the teens per day. And, anyway, I would sooner see a 'Gale too fat than too thin—or any other bird, for that matter. I am convinced, too, that the laying on of superfluous fat is just as much a constitutional matter with birds as it is with human beings. I this year had three 'Gales, and one proceeded to lay on a covering of adipose tissue that would have delighted an Esquimoux. When I reduced his bulk a little with saline medicine, he soon put it on again afterwards. Yet neither of the other two birds got ungainly fat, though all three had precisely the same diet, and were kept under the same conditions. And I have noticed the same thing happen with many other species. Fat doesn't worry the 'Gale I am speaking of, however, for he is warbling away almost at my elbow as I write, and he has sung off and on for the last three months. You might give your bird a dose or two, on alternate days, of mild saline medicine.

An Aviary Matter.

J.T.B.—For details of the building of an aviary, you should consult the book on aviaries and bird-rooms published by CAGE BIRDS. It is too lengthy a matter to be dealt with fully in the query columns. The best aspect is a south-easterly one (or full south), this catching the early morning sun. I have frequently had to tell querists how very uncertain and unsatisfactory it is to attempt to breed Hybrids by throwing a crowd of different birds into an aviary. Every beginner seems to think this just the method to pursue—quite the easiest and best road to success. And perhaps it is inevitable that the above method should strike them in that light. For reasons, however, which are too lengthy for me to deal with again now, this method almost invariably leads only to disappointment. If one or two carefully selected couples are turned into a fair-sized aviary, good often results; but never when a pair (or more) is crowded into every square foot of floor space. Further, very, very few hen British birds can be depended on to hatch their eggs and rear their young in captivity. If you want to go seriously into Hybrid breeding, then in my opinion it is best to house each couple in a big cage by themselves. If you keep the birds more particularly for pleasure, then you would undoubtedly get that from them when housed in an aviary. If you want to colour-feed the young, you will have to cage them up—to do it properly, that is. Make up your mind what method you will adopt, and write me again, when I shall be glad to advise you.

Bringing Linnets Into Song.

The Ancient Briton.—Your question is a bit "ancient," too (as you surmise), but as you are a novice, and a new reader, you have no need to apologise on that account. Are your Linnets really cocks? That is a point of greater importance than the food; as, of course, you will know. They ought to be singing stoutly now. Still, improper feeding, and consequent low condition, may explain the absence of song. The Linnet is best fed on the following lines; at least, this is how I feed my own, with the best of results, both as regards song, muling and exhibition. A good stock seed mixture is: Canary three pints, teazle two pints, summer rape, charlock, and linseed one pint each. In the winter (if the birds are in a cold room) and during the moult, about one pint of hemp should be added to the stock mixture. A feed of maw and niger, and a good wild seed mixture can be given frequently (varied) by way of a change. Let them have a little green-food, especially rape seedlings, in the winter, and ripe seeding shepherd's-purse, chickweed, plantain and groundsel freely in the summer. Many good makers put up a special Linnet (or Finch) mixture in packets, and a feed of this occasionally makes an acceptable variation from the ordinary stock mixture. As regards bringing them on to song and in condition quickly after the moult, the great "secret" is to give them plenty of the best old hemp, and crack it lightly, so that they feed well off it. Also put in the "side-pan," or "tit-bit" drawer, daily, a teaspoonful of the following mixture: Two ounces each of gold of pleasure, niger, sesame, and thistle, one ounce each of mustard (the golden-yellow seed), dandelion, maw, cornflower and lettuce. It is the finest "wild seed mixture," or "tit-bit," or "refresher" (call it what you will) that I know, and there is no waste—except that Goldies, for one bird, do not eat the mustard, though Linnets, etc., delight in it.

Another Aviary.

G.T.H.—You are not likely to have much success in breeding British birds in a six-foot indoor aviary. See reply to "J.T.B." this week. You will find it very interesting trying, of course, but please don't count too many chickens in advance, or, like many another beginner, you will finish up disappointed. Hen British birds are very unreliable breeders in captivity; most fanciers transfer their eggs to Canary foster-mothers. The pairs you enumerate are quite enough for your place, though one more hen Canary might be permitted. It is, as I have frequently explained, very wasteful, and consequently expensive to use a seed mixture in a large aviary containing many species of birds. The best method is to give the principal seeds (say canary, teazle, hemp, summer rape, charlock and sunflower—or, preferably, a mixture of half sunflower, half safflower) in separate hoppers or dishes, and throw a little of the other seeds in occasionally, by way of a change, or as "tit-bits," as fanciers say. If you must have your seed-mixture, then for a varied collection of Finches you will find it difficult to beat this: Canary and teazle three pints each, hemp two pints, summer rape and charlock one pint each, linseed half-a-pint, with about a half-pint of mixed sunflower and safflower seeds, increasing or decreasing the quantity of these latter according to whether the birds eat it all up or not—it depends on the composition of the collection, as some birds like those seeds more than others. The other seeds—niger, maw, wild seeds, wild seed mixture, etc.—you can give now and again, as indicated above. The exact quantity of hemp should vary according to the season (less in summer—unless feeding youngsters is going on—than in winter). A little more linseed is also useful during the moult.

Brevities.

Three Birds (E. Frost).—The birds sent were (1) Blue Tit (2) Marsh Tit (3) Coal Tit. Those you think are "Blue" Tits are no doubt Great Tits. I hope you are not killing them simply because the "garden is crowded with them"; they are very useful birds indeed.

A Lark's Failing (Mark Tapley).—You should spray the bird lightly now and again on suitable days, or blow a little clean water over him with your mouth. I advise you to give him some flowers of sulphur (from chemist) in his food for two or three weeks. Stir as much as will cover a shilling into each tablespoonful of food. Your method of feeding seems excellent. Let him have a little good "German paste" now and again (mixed with usual stock food).

A Song Thrush (Stella).—You should try the flowers of sulphur treatment recommended "Mark Tapley" this week, continuing with it for a good period. The changeable weather may have affected the bird. Of course, if a bird casts wing or tail feathers twice or thrice in quick succession, they then rarely develop properly, sometimes growing in a stunted fashion, sometimes failing to appear at all. Another natural moult, at the right time, will no doubt put him in a proper condition of plumage, if treatment fails.

Dark Mule (W. Pugh).—The hen you mention will do for breeding "large dark Mules," providing she is large herself, of good body substance, and with a bold broad head. Put her up with a big, well-built Goldie, of course. If she is a marked hen, by-the-bye, so much the better.

A Trio (Homo).—(1) The hen Greenfinch is just about the likeliest hen British bird to hatch her own eggs and rear her own young. But even they are sadly unreliable. A hen Canary is the safest. (2) Will you explain what it is you mean by "proceed in crossing"? Shall be glad to answer, then. I don't quite grasp your meaning. (3) Yes; "Green Linnet" is another name for the Greenfinch. The latter is the correct name.

A Bullie and a Linnet (Brummie).—It is not "sulphate" or iron which I recommend, but citrate of iron, a quite different thing. You cannot do more for your Linnet, beyond feeding him well and waiting for the moult to come to an end. See another answer given this week. Citrate of iron is the best thing for your Bullie—as much as will lie on a threepenny piece in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water. Discontinue after the desired effect has been obtained. Don't give hemp, but maw seed.

A Bullfinch (Rex).—You should feed and manage as I recommended "Piper." The mixture you send is not good, because it contains far too much hemp, to say nothing of niger. Judging from the "waste," the only seeds he has touched are hemp, teazle, and niger.

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Answered by WESLEY T. PAGE, F.Z.S., M.B.N.H.S.

An Outdoor Aviary.

E. R. E.—Your suggested aviary will answer admirably, and the only alteration I would suggest is its being made, if possible, one foot wider at the foot and roof, the whole length to be open wire-netting, and under this portion grass, rape, etc., could be grown, and it would be a fund of interest after a shower to see the Budgies taking a bath by rolling and tumbling about in the wet grass as they do in a state of nature. I should also advise letting a 12in. board hang down into the aviary the entire length where the roof terminates; or, if you must keep it as in your sketch, have the top 12 inches of front boarded and the lower 18 inches of wire netting. Well furnish it with branches, stout and fine, and to meet the needs of the respective species you must fix up at least double the number of husks and nest boxes that you have pairs of birds. I cannot, for obvious reasons, give dealers' names; watch our advertisements, and get each pair from a separate source; then your young birds will be unrelated. You could keep in such an aviary two or three pairs of Budgerigars, and one pair each of Cockateels and Rosella Parrakeets—or Budgerigars alone, say, half-a-dozen pairs.

What Parrakeet is it?

C. E. Swinnaton.—You have one of the species of Alexandrine Parrakeets, most probably the Alexandrine. To be quite sure there are no sores in the mouth, etc., as she will not permit you to look, get a box of honey and borax from your chemist, wait your opportunity, and put a little on the bird's tongue once or twice a day; it will, at any rate, do no harm. When these periods of excitement appear to be coming on, a dose of bromide of potassium would be beneficial—3 grains in a little syrup. I should with this bird, for a time, give a little boiled maize daily, and after carefully draining away all water, soak about half-a-teaspoonful of chemical food into it. Note: The boiled maize only keeps fresh one day, and the food vessels must be kept strictly clean. I should also give a piece of plain biscuit just dipped in chilled water and out again. A piece of figured or opaque glass, just sufficiently large to screen the bird, kept in place with two strips of beading, would obviate all risk of scare from the street. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps, nor any kind of animal food. It would be as well to report progress in 12 to 14 days. Twice a week put half-a-teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia into the drinking water.

Roseate Cockatoo with Diarrhœa.

R. T.—To prepare the way, I should give half-a-teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia in one teaspoonful of water, the first thing in the morning; the bird will then promptly drink the whole straight away. Much as I do dislike milk sop for Parrots, I should in this case risk giving a little daily for a week or ten days, but as soon as the bird's bowels are a little more comfortable promptly wean it from the milk sop. The ordinary diet should be supplied at the same time. I should also give several doses of tincture of opium, either direct to the mouth or by injection. I am not quite clear as to whether a portion of the voidings is worm-like, or that there are parasites. In the latter case I always use the old-fashioned remedy, areca nut powder (as much as will lie on a sixpence), slightly damped with a little syrup, and given in the form of a pellet every other day while the trouble lasts. In case of a stimulant being necessary, give a few sips of weak brandy and water (chilled) occasionally. I should not unduly restrict the drinking supply, only check over-drinking, let it have a good drink of chilled water, made the colour of port wine with Parrish's Chemical Food, three or four times a day. Keep the bird warm and free from draught. I should be interested in hearing how the bird progresses.

Plants for Outdoor Aviary.

W. A.—You do not say what kinds of birds; I may as well say at once that it is useless planting an aviary for such as Budgerigars, Parrakeets, and the like; all you can do for these is to put in stout branches, and sow the ground with grass, oats, rape, maize, etc., at intervals. For Finches, etc., could be grown, and it would be a fund in variety, Elder, Red and Black Currant bushes, any kind of fruit trees, wild Clematis, Nasturtiums, Mignonette, Marigolds, and though in themselves poisonous, I have never known harm to come from the various species of Laurels, and they certainly make splendid cover for ground birds, etc. Under the bushes plant or sow nettles, grass, chickweed, groundsel, dandellon, rape, and the like; make a jungle, at any rate, in patches. Willows are also excellent bushes for the aviary, and a number of cuttings put in round the sides soon grow and branch out, and are quite safe, and also very effective in appearance. A word of warning: Cardinals, Bullfinches, and also Canaries, are most destructive to growing plants and bushes in the spring.

Yellow-winged Sugar Bird.

No Name. This bird should be kept in a room in which the temperature is fairly even. It has possibly caught a chill during the recent severe weather. Let it have an abundant supply of ripe fruit of sorts, also stewed (rather sloppy) fruits (say apple), sweetened almost to a syrup, milk sop, and two or three mealworms daily. Also a little soft food mixture:—Two parts crumbled sponge cake, two parts ants' eggs, one part dried flies, and one part crushed biscuit. Well mix these, and make crumbly moist for use, or any good advertised mixture. Make its drinking water just saline with Epsom salts, or put in half-a-teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia (the latter for preference) for one day, and every other day well colour the drinking water with Parrish's chemical food. While the bird is out of condition put a little Mellin's Food with its daily portion of milksop, which should be rather sloppy.

Grey Parrot Almost Helpless.

J. T. Darnall.—It looks very much like a case of partial paralysis or epilepsy; in this case I fear but little can be done for it. However, as it has been improperly dieted in part, try the following treatment. Do not give any tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps, nor any kind of animal food. Diet: Seed mixture, maize, ripe fruit, plain or cracknell biscuits, nuts; also keep a piece of clean cuttle-fish in the cage, and gritty sand over cage tray. Give twice a week for a fortnight half-a-teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia over the boiled maize. You must drain away all surplus water from the maize before pouring over the magnesia. Make its drinking water the colour of pale port wine with Parrish's Chemical Food, and continue this for quite a month. Give it one or two doses of bromide of potassium, 3 grains in a little syrup, at intervals of three days; give it the first thing in the morning after removing the drinking water over-night; the bird will then readily take the liquid from a spoon, being thirsty. Diet carefully as above, as, if a cure be possible, this is quite as important as the drugs. Keep warm and quiet.

Feeding Scarlet Tanager.

Novice.—You are feeding too generously for the conditions of cage life. Tanagers are better without meat or fat; six to nine mealworms per diem are permissible. Let it have as much ripe fruit as it will eat, and a daily supply of some good soft food mixture is about all the species require. Of course, it will require water for drinking and bathing. The soft food mixture I find answers best for Tanagers, as follows:—Two parts each ants' eggs, dried flies, and crumbled sponge cake, and one part each game meal and fine crissel; thoroughly mix, and make the daily portion crumbly moist with boiling water. So long as the bird is kept out of draught, the temperature of any ordinary living room will be ample: at least, I keep them out of doors in my garden aviary all the year round. When covering a cage up at night, a space on top of cage about 6 inches diameter should be left uncovered.

Budgerigars Ailing.

H. Silson.—You must not make any sudden change from one room to another at present, but once fit, Budgerigars are best kept in some unheated room; at the same time, they must not be subjected to draughts. I should say your birds caught a chill in transit, or during the night while the fires were out, when there would be a heavy drop in temperature, especially during the recent cold weather. Give them a small piece of ripe apple to nibble at, and also a piece of cuttlefish, in addition to the regular dietary. Put half-a-teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia into a tablespoonful of water and let them have only this to drink for the one day. Procure from your chemist the following mixture:—Ipecacuanha wine, oxymel of squills, and glycerine in equal parts; use it at the proportion of half-a-teaspoonful of the mixture to one tablespoonful of water, and let this form their drinking fluid for a week. Afterwards put them on a course of chemical food for a few weeks, by making the drinking water the colour of pale port wine. If your birds should have contracted pneumonia, I fear nothing will ease them.

Parrot with Swollen Eye.

Polly.—Though you make no mention of this, I strongly suspect this bird has been fed on slops and messes, as well as Parrot mixture. Twice a week for a fortnight put half-a-teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia in the drinking water, and on the days that come between make the drinking water the colour of pale port wine with chemical food. Bathe the eye with a warm decoction of camomile flowers, and spray the nostrils with diluted glyco-thymoline. I prefer the following mixture:—Two parts each Canary seed and oats, one part each wheat, dari, maize, hemp and sunflower seeds; well mix, and keep a supply continuously in the cage. If I am wrong as to slops and messes, then the bird, in spite of your care, has certainly been in a draught and caught a chill. You must then contrive to let it have air without draught. Any of the following are wholesome, and may be given to vary the diet:—Ripe fruit of sorts, plain biscuits, nuts, and a dry crust of household bread. Note: Boiled maize only keeps fresh one day, and should not be given when the bird is eating heartily of the other dietary; but do not withdraw it too suddenly. Note other replies re slops and messes.

Moulting Period for Bishops.

P. H. S.—I find Bishops and Weavers very variable as to the period of moult in this country: for instance, to quote two cases, my Madagascar Weaver and Bishop moulted in November last, while my Half-masked Weaver was in full moult while the recent blizzard was on, and he was out-of-doors, too, and is now almost in full feather again; both these are seasoned birds, which have been in my aviary for some years, and moult regularly at the periods named. For many caged Bishops and Weavers between now and March is about the usual period, and I expect it is this which has caused your bird to shed its feathers. There is, of course, another factor with birds kept in living rooms during very cold weather such as we have recently experienced; the temperatures of such rooms are very variable—very hot in evenings and correspondingly cold in the early mornings; this variableness alone is sufficient to throw many species into moult. But I expect yours is the ordinary moult, hastened perhaps a little by variable temperature.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Canary (Strebor).—Chronic softening of liver, then acute inflammations of that organ involving the lungs.

Canary (G. V. Mower).—This bird, and probably the others, came by its death through septic inflammation of liver and lungs. Cages occupied by any of them should be disinfected before being used again.

GENERAL.

Answered by the Editor.

Our thanks to J. M. Hickman, T. Brown, Miss Woods, A. Price, and others for cuttings, news items, etc.

Initials, etc. (E. H. Williams).—We thank you for your kindly remarks, and naturally are sorry you should have occasion for even a single grumble. We will certainly enquire into the matter, and are obliged to you for bringing same to our notice.

Two Seeds (F. Yates).—We are not aware that either thistle or shepherd's purse has any particular "trade" name. The term "English" is used to distinguish the small light-coloured thistle seed in demand among fanciers from a dark brown-coloured large seed sold as "thistle"; the former is double the price of the latter, and sometimes more than double.

Square Net Trap (M.J.).—If you will send a clear drawing and explanation, we shall be pleased to publish the same.

Points about Sales, etc. (Lex, Maulden).—We are much obliged to you for the suggestions you have been good enough to make; we will give them careful consideration in the near future.

A Suggestion (T. Swift).—Thanks; we will bear your suggestion in mind for a future issue.

Budgerigars (G. E. Busby).—Thanks for your interesting article, which we shall hope to find space for in a week or two's time. Pleased to hear from you at any time. The "wetting" you have given the MS. leaves it rather illegible, by-the-bye.

Directory of Societies (J.R.M.).—No; there is no charge whatever for inserting particulars of societies in the "Directory" in CAGE BIRDS' ANNUAL. Had there been any charge, we should have stated this.

Inverness Show (A. Ross).—As this matter has drifted purely into an exchange of personalities, we really cannot see our way to re-open it. You are entitled to draw your own conclusions from the fact that the other "A. Ross" made no denial of your statements.

CORRESPONDENCE.

CONGRATULATIONS FOR THE SCOTTISH NATIONAL SHOW.

SIR,—Being a visitor to the above show, I was greatly interested in seeing the splendid arrangements carried out for looking after the comfort of the exhibits. I think also that the board on which the awards were marked immediately after judging, was a splendid idea, and should be copied by other societies holding large shows. I should also like to thank the show officials for their kindness to me, and I hope to have the pleasure of visiting the show another year. It was well worth my journey of 800 miles there and back.

Swansea. DAN O'CONNELL.

A HINT TO FANCIERS IN DARWEN AND DISTRICT.

SIR,—I perused with keen interest the letter which appeared in CAGE BIRDS under the above heading. I heartily endorse what "A Darwen Fancier" says, and hope that we are about to see an effort made to bring about a more agreeable state of affairs in the "Peaceful Valley." I am rather at a loss to understand why the local Fanciers' Association cannot take the matter in hand, seeing that their rules include a cage bird section. Perhaps it is that they are rather doubtful as to the results that would accrue therefrom. However, I consider the time has arrived when cage bird fanciers in Darwen and District should make an effort to establish a society of their own, so as to be independent, and not dependent on a society which cannot, or will not, provide a cage bird loving section of the Fancy, with their share of pleasure and enjoyment. I for one am willing to do what is in my power to bring such a society into existence, and trust that all friends in Darwen and District will do likewise. If a meeting could be arranged and members enrolled we should be in a good position for the next show season, and as Darwen lies in such a favourable position, we should, no doubt, be favoured by exhibitors from all the adjoining towns. I trust that the efforts made by "Darwen Amateur" and myself will be the means of creating a keen interest amongst all interested persons in Darwen. Finally, I appeal to all fellow fanciers to write me as early as possible, so that a meeting may be arranged. Thanking you for granting me so much of your valuable space, and wishing CAGE BIRDS the success it deserves. JAS. DAVISON.

LIVERPOOL AMALGAMATED SHOW.

SIR,—I should also like to ask the secretary of Garston Society why he did not carry the above show on? Did he write to all the secretaries in the district or not? If he did not intend to run the show, why did he not pass it on to the next society, and publish it through the press? It has caused a lot of unpleasantness in the district, as everybody looks forward to the New Year's Day show.

PUZZLED ONE.

ROLLER CANARIES AT THE PALACE SHOW.

SIR,—Will members of the British Roller Canary Club who have not received a schedule for the Palace "Jubilee" Show, kindly write for one at once to Mr. Ramsden (11, Josephine Avenue, Brixton, London. S.W.), as the specials given are extra good, and every member should compete for same. Will they also note that the annual general meeting will take place at the Palace Show on Saturday, February 6th; time and place will be posted up in the Roller Section.

J. W. NORRIS, Hon. Sec.

CHAFFINCH-BRAMBLEFINCH HYBRID "WRONG CLASSED" AT THE WELSH NATIONAL SHOW.

SIR,—I was rather surprised and disappointed not to see a reply in your last issue to Judge Evans' letter of the previous week, and I for one cannot let same pass unnoticed, as I do not agree with all the remarks made by Judge Evans. I have seen the bird which was "Wrong Classed" on more than one occasion, and, in my opinion, it certainly is a Hybrid. If not, whence does it get the Chaffinch whites which are so prominent on butts of wings, also the pink tinge on the breast? The movements of the bird, if watched closely, will be seen to resemble both the Chaffinch and Bramblefinch. Mr. Evans says he has tried for this cross himself and failed; but his trying and not being successful does not prove that it is impossible. He also compares Mr. Coffey's Hybrid to a bird owned by a Mr. P. Jenkins, and shown by him as a hen Bramblefinch. I think I have seen this bird of Mr. Jenkins'. I believe he exhibited it at the last Scottish National Show. But I fail to see where this bird resembles Mr. Coffey's (not in colour, surely), and I would like to see Mr. Coffey's bird and Mr. Jenkins' bird both at the coming Palace show. Let our judges compare them, and I think they will then agree that Mr. Evans has made a mistake in classing them together. In conclusion, I would like to ask Mr. Coffey if he cannot enlighten us concerning his bird, as to where and by whom it was bred, as I am sure it would be interesting to all your readers. No doubt Mr. Coffey could give us proof of the genuineness of same.

WILL MULES BREED?

An Answer in the Affirmative from Far New Zealand.

(By the courtesy of Mr. J. W. Ramsden we are enabled to put before our readers the appended letter from a lady bird-lover in New Zealand. It would seem to supply an answer to the vexed question as to whether Mules will or will not produce fertile eggs. We are sure that bird-lovers in England will join us in thanking Miss Martin for the trouble taken to bring the matter to our notice.—EDITOR.)

Wairarapa, New Zealand.

To the Sec. of the Crystal Palace Bird Show.

SIR,—As I believe that up to the present no authentic case is on record of a Mule's egg being fertile, I send you the following account of an undoubted instance which has just occurred in my own aviary. I am sending you a full account, as I believe it is a matter of interest, and that you may be glad of all particulars, especially as I am at such a distance, and I must apologise for taking up your time, if I am mistaken in thinking it is a matter worthy of attention. I have taken up bird-breeding for the last few years as a hobby, and last year I was specially successful in breeding Goldfinch-Canary Mules. At the end of last June (mid-winter here), I separated all my cock Canaries and my Goldfinch from my hen Canaries intended for muling purposes. These latter I left in the aviary alone with Mules, where they have been ever since, with no possibility of any other birds but Mules being near them. For the last few weeks the hen Canaries have been pairing with the cock Mules, and nesting, laying and sitting, on what I imagined would be all clear eggs. One pair, a dark Goldfinch Canary Mule (bred by myself last year), and a clear buff four-year-old hen Canary laid four eggs, and the hen sat as usual. One egg I broke by accident, and, of course, thought it quite unimportant. A week later I noticed that another egg was missing and that nearly all the lining of the nest had been pulled out; so I lifted the basket down, intending to make it more comfortable for the hen, and saw signs of the missing egg being broken. On lifting out the two remaining eggs, I was amazed to see that one of them had a thick hatching appearance about it. I immediately tested it and found that it really was fertile. As the risk in leaving it in the aviary was great, I put it under a sitting hen Canary in a cage, where I am (at the time of writing) hoping it will hatch in three days. The second remaining egg looks addled, not clear, but this I am not sure of. I have removed the parents of this fertile Mule egg to a cage by themselves, where they are building again, and I am much hoping that some of their eggs may be fertile this time too. The eggs laid by the other hens in the aviary have so far all been clear. I have six other cock Mules and two hen Mules of the same breed, and shall, of course, carry on the experiments with them. The father of all these Mules was a Goldfinch taken as a nestling. He mated at nine months old with a Canary (the eggs being fertile), and during the season had eight nests of fertile eggs with hen Canaries. Unfortunately, I sent him to the Wellington show (with four of my Mules), where he took 1st prize and was sold for one guinea. Had I not been an amateur (it is the first time I have shown) I should have put a much higher price on him as I did not want to sell him at all, and had no idea anyone would give a guinea for a Goldfinch, which is a common bird out here. He is a most excellent parent bird and mate, never interfering with eggs or nests or young, and looking after them and his mate most carefully. With my four Mules I took 1st, 2nd, and 3rd prize, and a h.c., but there was only one other bird to compete against in the class. I mention this so that you may know that my Mules are real Mules and not dark Canaries, which some amateurs call "Mules." One of my cock Mules has mated with a hen Mule, and they are building. I will not close this until the day that the Mule chick is due, so I can let you know if it hatches successfully I hope this account is not too long, and I hope it is of interest; if it is not, I must again apologise for taking up so much of your time.

MAUD S. MARTIN.

P.S.—I am sorry to say the Mule egg contains a perfectly formed dead chick, of a light pink coloured skin, and white down; so it would probably have been a light bird, which makes its death all the more disappointing. I have put it into mothylated spirits just as it was, with the top half of the shell chipped off and exposing the head and shoulders, etc., of the chick, the rest of the bird being in the remainder of the shell. I did not like to destroy it altogether, as there is no doubt at all about its being the product of a fertile Mule's egg, and I believo therefore very uncommon, if not unique. The parents have just completed another nest, and if again they have fertile eggs and hatch them, I will let you know. I should be glad, if this matter is of interest, if you would let it be known in the right quarter.—M.S.M.

PRIZE MONEY AT THE WELSH NATIONAL CAGE BIRD SHOW.

SIR,—I regret having to mention in the press the non-payment of prize money at the above show. But having failed to get a reply from the secretary, Mr. R. J. Truscott, or the treasurer, Mr. W. A. Truscott, in answer to my inquiries, I thought perhaps they might have the courtesy to reply through your columns when they intend to pay over the second prizo in the Greypate Class. In the schedule it stated that all prize money would be paid in ten days after date of show. It has come to my knowledge that other exhibitors in this district havo received their prize money and cards, so I simply want to know why the abovo gentlemen refrain from letting me know the reason why I should be treated in this manner. I hope I shall have a satisfactory answer, and that the Welsh C.B.C. will have a prosperous New Year.

BORDER FANCIES AT THE RECENT KILSYTH SHOW.

SIR,—May I ask Border Fancy Canary exhibitors at Kilsyth Show, held December 19th, 1908, to look over their stock and see whether any of the birds do not belong to them. Mr. Scott, Crofts Cottages, Chirnside, Berwickshire, states that he received a buff hen instead of his buff cock, Class 82, No. 1. Although written to, some of the exhibitors havo taken no notice of my request. Any information will be gladly received by either Mr. Scott or myself.

PRIZE MONEY AT KILMARNOCK O.C.B.S. SHOW.

SIR,—I see in your valuable paper CAGE BIRDS of January 2nd, a letter re prize money at Kilmarnock O.C.B.S. Show. I entered four birds here on December 4th and 5th, and got fourth in Class 45 (7 in class), fourth in Class 49 (16 in class), and second in Class 52 (11 in class). So, judge of my surprise when I got 1s. sent me. They advertise that they will pay 12s. for first prize, 8s. for second, 4s. for third, 2s. for fourth. I wrote the secretary, but got no answer, so that I am worse dealt with than Mr. Miller.

THE "JUBILEE" CRYSTAL PALACE SHOW.

SIR,—I am asked by Mrs. Askham to mention that the donor's birds will not compete for Special No. 237. By Mr. S. M. Townsend to mention that Special No. 265 is for members of the Foreign Bird Club only. By the Crystal Palace Company to announce that extra steam heating pipes will be fitted for this show, and that the whole of the show ground will bo covered in. In reply to several enquiries, Mr. Russell Humphrys will judge Foreign Birds this year for certain; he has written me to this effect.

A CANADIAN SHOW FROM THE POINT OF VIEW OF A VISITOR.

SIR,—Since I first went to Canada I have been back home to Oldham, and the fanciers there asked me about the birds in Canada. I may say that I have had the opportunity of visiting three of the annual shows. The sixth annual show was held on Friday and Saturday, December 11th and 12th, by the Montreal Canary and Cage Bird Association, which is the only one in Montreal, and has a membership of thirty-five. The Conservatory Hall, in which the show was held, is a beautiful room, very bright, and nicely situated in the busiest part of the city. The night was a typical Canadian wintor night, but, thanks to the street car, which landed me from my boarding house to the show room door, once in the show room the elements were soon forgotten, and my eyes were feasting on the birds which I love, and have bred for over a quarter of a century. While I am out here my son-in-law has charge of my birds. To start with, I found there were no catalogues, so I could only mope about and look at tho birds. The show manager told me the entries numbered 250, one hundred more than last year. The birds are shown here in anything which can be called a cage. Thero were more varieties in cages than varieties in birds. The Scotch Fancy show cage was very much in evidence. One Yorkshire exhibitor told me he had made his own cages after his own idea. He told me he thought the cages would have a tendency to make the birds stand up and show their type. These cages were made of wood, all but the front and top, which were made of very crooked wire. Altogether they have the appearance of having been made with hammer and pocket-knife. This same exhibitor told several people (including myself) that in the old country we had no such type as in the birds wo were looking at (which were his own). I should like to have placed before him some of the Yorkshires shown at the Palace (London). The cages above-mentioned, I may say, looked like chimney pots, and stood above all the others, their height being about 18 inches by about eight inches deep and wide. I was told that no birds were allowed to be shown that had been colour fed in any way. The penalty was disqualification. So there were no colour fed birds in the show, only one, which had been imported. This solitary exception was a nearly clear cap Golden Lizard, a nice large bird, with beautiful colour and rowing, and the only show bird of its kind in the place. But this bird, unfortunately, had moulted two or three body feathers, as the white tips were showing. In this class there were eight oxhibits, all over-year birds—except the one mentioned. In Scotch Fancies I counted 65 birds, quito a little show, and some very good birds, too. Of course, these birds have mostly come with their owners from Scotland, and there were some regular swaggering beauties of the half hoop type; only two or three showed the drive of the Belgian. I noticed that the smaller birds were the best in type and feather; the larger birds were very coarse and raggy in feather. I think I never saw a nicer display of Scotch Fancies in one show. Next came the Yorkshires. I am myself a Yorkshire breeder, but really I don't know how to describe these birds, for there was not a show specimen in the place. Some of them were not more than five inches in length, while the longest would not measure six and a-half inches. There was neither type, quality, nor position in any of the birds, and very little colour. But you could find frills, flat heads, thin necks, thick necks, hinged tails, fish tails, and enough loose feather to fill a pillow case, as the saying goes. Forty-five exhibits in Yorkshires. Next came Norwich Plainheads. These were all poor specimens, and all more or less slack in feather, with very poor narrow skulls; nono of the Bullfinch type, but long. Some of the birds were hanging with fat in front like a cropbound barn-door fowl. There were eight Norwich Cinnamons. The first prize bird was very chubby in body, but had the poorest head I ever saw, was fat in front, and hugged the perch as if it was frightened of someone stealing it. The Crests were of no moment, small birds, with head pieces which looked as if they had had pieces bitten out of them (generally called split Crests). I noticed one having the centre close to the beak, whilo one had its head-gear apparently wrong side up. I heard one person remark that this was a "fine Crest." Next came a card which said "Manchesters." Here I was lost, and asked what it meant. I was told these were what we in Eng'and called Lancashires; but I could not see any Lancashire birds. In fact, the birds that should have carried the coppy carried an all-round crest, and the Lancashire Plainheads were better Crest-breds than those in the Crest-bred class. The only bird in the show that resembled a Lancashire was in the Yorkshire class, a large thick Buff, which showed much of the Lancashire Plainhead. There were a couple of Borders, a few Germans, several Goldfinch Mules, and a few Goldfinches. There was also one beautiful Grey Parrot with a red tail. This was the cleanest and tightest feathered bird I have ever noticed. Some of the children said it could talk, but I only heard it whistle a few times. One thing they could do very well with out here, and that is the man who shows Yorkshires at the Palace, and when asked how he got his birds to look so well, said he sent their clothes to the laundry, and when they came back put them on again in the right place. In other words, a lesson in tubbing is required.

A LOSS IN TRANSIT.

SIR,—I was very pleased to read in your valuable paper letters from "Maulden" and Mr. A. Lloyd on the above subject. I may say I have now put the case in other hands to fight, and trust the result may be satisfactory, and of some benefit to the Fancy at large, as well as myself, for it is now time something was done in this line—I mean "Railway v. Fanciers." Allow me to thank those gentlemen who have so kindly written me personally on the above matter.

PRIZE MONEY AT DULWICH O.S. SHOW.

SIR,—I am enclosing full report of the D.O.S. annual meeting, and a perusal of the same will let your readers see exactly how the society stands. We owe in the open classes about £8 in prize money, but as £6 10s. has already been promised, we shall soon escape this difficulty. All other accounts have been settled. I think you will agree that we did not do so badly for a first year's effort, taking into consideration that for a two-day show (owing, no doubt, to the inclemency of the weather) the gate was under £4. The rent was £10 10s., and we guaranteed full prize money, in spite of the fact that the open classes did not pay. We regret Mr. Sandy rushes into print for the sake of 5s. The secretaries would have replied to his communication before had they had the meeting's decision. It is most discouraging to organisers of open shows. We are not the only society who will find it difficult to cater for exhibitors if shown up and abused for slight delays. Exhibitors' confidence will not be misplaced, but a little indulgence on their part would be greatly appreciated by the honorary workers, the officials, who are ever diving deep down into their pockets, also giving all their spare time to the advancement of the Fancy (which is termed a hobby), and in return get nothing but the sarcasm of those who delight in gaining notoriety through the Fancy Press. Are they advancing the Fancy? No wonder societies are asking themselves the question: Are open shows worth the candle?

G. F. WOOLHOUSE,
Chairman of Committee.

P.S.—As Mr. Sandy appears so conversant with the show rules, why did he not enclose a stamp for reply, and conform to Rule 22?

PROPOSED CAGE BIRD SOCIETY FOR STAVELEY & DISTRICT.

SIR,—A meeting has been arranged by a few fanciers with the idea of forming a society. It will be held at the Speedwell Inn on January 23rd, at 8 o'clock. Now, Staveley fanciers, roll up and let us have a good start.

CURING AN AILING LINNET.

SIR,—Having had a cock brown Linnet very bad, I tried different things to fetch him round, but all to no purpose. I thought I would try an experiment, so I got some herbs called loose-strife (purple). I put about a handful to a pint of boiling water, and gave it to the bird, when cold, instead of its drinking water. Glad to say it is all right now, and singing again. I would be pleased if you would publish this, as it might be useful to some fancier who has a Linnet ailing.

THE RECENT LLANELLY SHOW.

SIR,—The Llanelly and District C.B. Society's show came off on January 5th, in beautiful weather after the snow, and from an exhibition point of view, was a success, competition being very keen. The total in entries was a disappointment, as I hoped I should get somewhere near last year's total. Am sorry to say that this year there will be a loss to the members. Everything passed off well, and, mind, there is no bird missing this year. But a travelling case for one bird has been sent wrong, belonging to Mr. Portman, and I hope the party that received it will return it to me after he reads this letter. We put this falling off in entries down to the great damage done by the letter, re the missing bird last year. I cannot congratulate Mr. Tedstone on his letters, and I should think that if he wished to write letters they ought to have been written months ago. He has now had his revenge on the Llanelly Society. He did not take into account the changes that take place in a great many societies from one year to another; the present has to suffer for the doings of the past, if only myself, as the secretary. A local correspondent wrote you the other day that the Llanelly secretary was a worker, and I may say that I am proud of being a worker, and having worked to earn an honest living, and followed my hobby for the last 40 years, that is to my credit. Mr. Tedstone, as secretary of a society, could do more to benefit the Fancy if he would only take in hand the best ways to get our railway rates reduced, also for passenger traffic, so that fanciers and supporters of the Fancy may travel with their birds at a cheaper rate. I then believe that there would be less missing birds, and exhibitors would see how their birds are treated when at shows outside of their own district. To bring on the question of the missing bird just before the show could have been nothing but spite. I have received a great many letters commending us for the care and way the birds were returned, and those I prize very much. I can heartily congratulate you on your report of our show, and I know that your paper for date of Jan. 9th was clean sold out in the town.

DANIEL JOHN, Hon. Sec.

AN IRISH CHALLENGE CUP.

SIR,—I notice in last week's CAGE BIRDS, under "Twitterings," that Mr. C. A. Reilly (Dublin) is credited with winning the Yorkshire Canary Challenge Cup and the "Drummond" Challenge Cup at the recent Dublin Pigeon and Cage Bird Show. This is very misleading, as I am still leading for the former coveted trophy with 35 points over this gentleman. I thank you in anticipation for publishing this, and wish CAGE BIRDS every success.

PROPOSED FANCIERS' CLUB FOR FOREST GATE AND DISTRICT.

SIR,—Knowing that there are many fanciers in this heavily populated district, embracing as it does Forest Gate, East Ham, Wanstead, etc., who are as yet uncatered for, I feel that there is plenty of room and enough fanciers to commence a fanciers' club, where we may meet to talk over our most fascinating hobby, and bring us more in accord with that good feeling which is so very much needed nowadays. If through your courtesy in publishing this it should come to the notice of any gentlemen of the same opinion, I should be happy to hear of same with a view to arranging a scheme to that end.

A CHARMING OUTDOOR AVIARY.

See Photograph on page 20.

SIR,—Holidaying the other week found me face to face with Mr. Williams, of Nether Street, Kirkcaldy, and his aviary. The year 1906 witnessed a fluttering among a few of the birdmen in Kirkcaldy, leaning strongly to the keeping of British birds. This developed from two or three kept in ordinary cages to collections in small house aviaries. At this stage a friend, on being shown Mr. Williams' small house aviary, and knowing him to be a man of aspirations, dropped the hint, that if he cared to tumble out two pounds or so, he would see to the building of an outside aviary, which would knock all their paltry inside concerns into a cocked hat. He had no need to offer twice, and the outside aviary was in process of rapid growth by the beginning of 1907. The work has been done entirely by Mr. Williams, and a few bird lovers about the place, and in their spare time. The entire structure covers a space of 20ft. by 7ft. 6ins., and stands 11ft. from the ground. The inside house measures 8ft. 6ins. by 6ft. 6ins., the floor being raised 1ft. from the ground, having a clear space under, which is very effective in keeping it free from damp, allowing a current to flow underneath, and thus keeping the inside sweet. The roof is M shaped, with overhanging gables, surmounted by turned ball finials, and a moulded ridge between. It is excellently lighted by windows in each end, while sliding ventilators near the roof top keep the inside airy and fresh. Access is had by a door about 6ft. by 2ft. 3in. in one end, which opens into a small vestibule with another door, so as to allow one door to be open only at one time, in case any of the inmates might happen to get out, when one is feeding or otherwise treating them. The framing of this inner compartment is 2in. by 2in. timber covered with tongued and grooved half-inch boards, and fitted up with all necessary perches, etc. The outside court is framed with 1½in. by 1½in. timber, covered with small gauge wire netting, ornamented by scalloped boards at the base and on the top of domed roof. Up till now I have treated entirely with the artificial aspect of the aviary; I will now speak of its natural aspect. Here is a veritable birds' paradise. The miniature rocks composed of breeze and Portland cement rise rugged, bold, and wild, shelving out in irregular masses; small caves here, there, and everywhere, with ravines and gullies, clothed in fern green. Here on the top of a cliff a fountain is tossing its glistening drops over a group of brightly-coloured Finches gamboling and splashing in the pool below. There is also the drip, drip, drip of the water as it tumbles over the cliff into the fish-pond bathing the fern fronds with many coloured gems, as they peer from their rocky recesses. The brilliant Goldfinches swim leisurely in their watery home, a frog sits in its quaint way on a ledge overhanging the cool water. A tortoise now climbs over a rising rock, now wending its way in slow and stately step over the green sward. Honeysuckle grows along the paths and swings itself in and out of the rock crevices. Yonder on that grassy slope, and under the stout holly tree, are feeding a brilliant group, the gorgeous Goldfinch, the burly rose and black Bullfinch, the finely-streaked Siskin, the Mottled Zebra Finch, Canaries (yellow and buff), the white splashed Chaffinch, the russet Bramblefinch—what a mass of changing colour! Yonder again the Weaver birds ply their woof to the branches of the shrubs with Nature's shuttle, the little Spice birds and Zebra Finches popping out betimes from a small hole in their bark-bound nest boxes. What a picture this of joyous Nature?—no struggle for existence to mar the harmony of their life. And why? Just because man has made, by virtue of his experience and reason, their conditions to harmonise with their bird nature.

A. W., Jun.

PENDLEBURY, SWINTON & DISTRICT C. AND B.B.S.

SIR,—Since my last letter to you respecting the formation of a society in the above-named district, I have had numerous callers asking for information respecting same. We had a kind of a meeting on January 8th, when all present volunteered to become members if a society were formed. So we decided to look for a suitable room. We have now got one at the "Blue Ribbon Hall," Pendlebury Road, Pendlebury, in which to hold our first meeting, which we decided to call on January 21st. Friends and fanciers will be welcome. The meeting is to start at 8 p.m. We hope to have a good number present.

CLUB REPORTS.

UDDINGSTON & DISTRICT C.B.S.

Meeting held in the Recreation Rooms, December 25th. It was proposed, seconded, and carried, that we hold our show on February 6th, 1909, in the Royal Hall, Uddingston. Ou rschedule has been printed. We are hoping this will prove a success. Mr. Alex. M'Donald will judge. The usual vote of thanks concuuded the meeting.—W. P. CAMPBELL, hon. secretary.

LANCASHIRE AND LIZARD F.A.

Meeting held at the "Howard Arms," Glossop, on January 2nd, but owing no doubt to its being so close to New Year's Day, only a moderate number of members put in an appearance. However, a fair amount of business was done, and everything points to the Lancashire and Lizard Canaries being more popular in the immediate future, as several new members aro only awaitiug the beginning of the next season to become members. A hearty vote of thanks to Mr. John Garner for bis services as chairman brought the meeting to a close.—JOHN RUKIN, hon. seeretary.

SUNDERLAND C.B.A.

Usual meeting held on January 2nd, Mr. J. Farrar presiding over a good attendance. Several letters were read, including one from the president intimating that he would give us a cup for competition at our annual shows. The secretary was instructed to thank the president for his kindness. Dr. O'Neal evoked much enthusiasm when he intimated bis intention of getting up a dramatic entertainment for our benefit; the whole expense of this will be borne by the dramatic society of which he is president. The doctor was warmly thanked for his kind offer. Several members paid their levies, and everything is going on well. All fanciers are invited to attend our meeting.—REID AND MADDISON, Hon. Secs.

CITY OF GLASGOW O.S.

Annual general meeting held on December 26th, in the Reception Room, City Hall. The president, Mr. Andrew Jardine, presided over a good company of members. The balance sheet for 1908 was discussed and duly adopted. The election of office bearers resulted as follows: President, Mr. Andrew Jardine; vice-president, Mr. John McLay; joint secretaries and treasurers, Messrs. Alex Macdonald and John Young; auditors, Messrs. George G. Aitkenhead and Peter Thom, along with a large committee of well known fanciers. Several motions were tabled to come up for discussion at a meeting in May. It was decided to hold our annual smoking concert at the Bank Restaurant, 35, Queen Street, on February 19th, when it is hoped there will be a large turn out of fanciers. A vote of thanks to the chairman brought the meeting to a close.—A. JARDINE.

PORTOBELLO C.B.S.

Annual general meeting held December 7th. The balance-sheet was read and passed as correct, showing a cash balance on the right side of over £9, being an increase of £3 on last year's balance. In addition to this we have eight silver cups, viz., one for best young bird in each of the following sections: Scotch Fancy, Border Fancy, Crest or Crestbred, Mule or Hybrid, Norwich, and Yorkshire; also one for best young bird in show, and the latest addition, a handsome silver cup, kindly presented by T. R. Graham Yooll, Esq., for most points. Mr A. Matthew was unanimously re-elected president, and the members are very fortunate in securing his services for another year, as he is an ideal chairman and one who spares no pains to promote the welfare of the society. Mr. W. R. Dunn was re-elected vice-president. Two or three changes were made in the committee, and Mr. J. Hogg and Mr. J. F. Arthur were elected joint secretaries. The president, Mr. Matthew, moved a vote of thanks to retiring office-bearers. Another vote of thanks to the chair brought the meeting to a close.—J. LEACH AND W. LECKIE, Ex-Secs.

LEEDS C.B.S.

Annual meeting held at Lockhart's Restaurant, Briggate, on January 2nd, Mr. Chambers in the chair. The distribution of prizes to the winners in the recent members' show took place. Mr. Chambers was appointed chairman, Mr. Tose secretary, and Mr. McMillan treasurer, for the ensuing year. The chief discussion was respecting the work of the Cago Bird Union, and Mr. Tose proposed that the Leeds Society secede from the membership of the Union, as, in his opinion, the Union had completely failed to carry out the object for which it was formed; and, furthermore, in his opinion, the only work the Union had efficiently carried out was the receiving of money from societies paying their annual contributions, or for licences of societies wishing to hold shows under their rules. Mr. Chew seconded the proposition, saying there were points about the Union of which he was a staunch supporter, but so long as Rule 17 was in force he could not possibly support the Union, as it meant that a society should contribute. which bound the hands of the members as to where they should show; also he was much against the spirit shown to the Yorkshire Union. A discussion was then carried on by Messrs. Mennard, Cobb, and Ireland, and after a trenchant speech by the chairman, for and against the Union, a vote was taken, when it was resolved to resign membership of the Union, there not being a dissentient vote.—WILLIAM TOSE, Hon. Sec.

STOCKPORT B.F.A.

The annual dinner, concert, and presentation of special prizes (won at the last show) took place at the Boar's Head Hotel on December 22nd, and proved a success. Counellor E. Clarke, J.P., occupied the chair. A good substantial dinner was provided by Mr. and Mrs. Nelson, and was done justice to by upwards of 20 members and friends. Whilst the tables were being cleared, we listened to the several artists who came to entertain us. Our old friend, Mr. Cuthbert, played a selection on the piano, and Mr. Haines obliged with a parody on the song, "If those lips could only speak," which created roars of laughter. Mr. Will Davies (baritone vocalist) followed with "Antonio." Mr. Haines again treated us to a song entitled "I felt quite out of place." Friend Matthews obliged with a song. Mr. W. Davies gave us another song, and Mr. Matthews followed. Other items were also enjoyed by the company. The chairman then made the presentation of cups, medals, tea urns, rose bowl, and egg stand to the successful exhibitors, complimenting them on their success. He also spoke encouragingly to the other members, and hoped they would be successful at the next show. The various winners suitably replied, after which Messrs. Haines and Cuthbert obliged with musical selections. Mr. W. Stafford proposed a vote of thanks to the chairman for presiding, and for contributing so generously with special prizes. The proposal was seconded by Mr. F. W. Nelson in a very able speech, and carried with musical honours. The Chairman replied, telling us he was pleased to be in the company of fanciers such as Stockport possessed. Mr. W. T. Hill proposed a vote of thanks to the host and hostess, which was seconded by Mr. G. H. Massey, and carried unanimously. Mr. Nelson replied on behalf of bis better half and himself. Time being "up," the proceedings were brought to a close by the singing of the National Anthem. The members tendered their best thanks to the artistes for entertaining them.—W. STAFFORD.

HYDE AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

We had a very successful meeting on January 8th, making six new members, bringing the total of new members for the last two meetings up to ten. Mr. Marlor gave a splendid washing exhibition. Many questions were asked, and were ably answered by Mr. Marlor. A hearty vote of thanks was passed to him. It was decided to hold a table show of breeding pairs, any variety, on January 30th, at 7 o'clock. Fanciers are heartily invited.—FRED. BARRACLOUGH, Sec.

THE SHOWS.

PLYMOUTH.

The Western F.A. held their second annual show at Plymouth Market on January 6th. The entry showed a very gratifying increase on last year's, 150 cages being staged. The birds were accommodated in a snug corner, and were amply screened off from all draughts, an innovation which was very popular with the exhibitors present, and one which should obtain for the society an increased entry at their next exhibition. Mr. W. E. Chapple was the cage bird secretary, and was indefatigable in his efforts both for the comfort of the birds and visitors. He was ably seconded by Messrs. Adams, Watson, sen., Snell, and Wills. Mr. Thomas Pope (Plymouth) judged, and his awards were very favourably received.

YARM AND EAGLESCLIFFE.

The first annual show was held in the Central Hall, Yarm, on January 9th. The fixture was favoured with nice weather, a good entry both in numbers and quality, and a capital attendance. The secretaries, Messrs. Wilkinson and Danby, had everything well in hand, and were ably assisted by a hardworking and capable committee, who were indefatigable in their attention to the needs of the exhibits. Norwich were very fair, and the Yorkshire classes contained many good specimens; but the British bird and Mule sections were undoubtedly the feature of the show, grand teams being staged by Messrs. Chick, W. J. Taylor, Axe, Nicholson and Son, Duncan, Parlett, and Birchley; whilst in the Foreign bird class Messrs. Nicholson and Son, who had the class to themselves, staged a grand team, which was greatly admired. Mr. Battye judged, his awards giving satisfaction.

RAMSEY (I.O.M.)

Annual show held on Jan. 7th in the Palace, Ramsey. This room is admirably adapted for a show, being spacious and well lighted and quite free from draughts. The society are to be congratulated on their president, Mr. A. G. Curphey, who takes a lively interest in the society both of a personal and a very practical kind, as the handsome list of specials testify. The Rev. H. T. Devall makes an admirable chairman, thoroughly hard-working and courteous, whilst in Mr. G. H. Allison the society have a secretary to be proud of. It would be invidious to particularise any member of the committee, as they all worked like Trojans, and with such a body of fanciers it was no wonder all went merrily as a marriage bell. The judging was over and the cards up in good time, and then the dinner, presided over by the chairman, was a pure delight, a perfect feast of reason and flow of soul and other things. Mr. S. Hadwin judged, and there was little fault to be found with his awards. The Norwich were not a strong lot, but the Yorkshires were grand, capable of holding their own in any company. Some really good birds were staged in the British and Mule classes.

PLUMSTEAD AND WOOLWICH.

The 2nd annual show of the Plumstead and Woolwich C.B.S. was held in Trinity Schools, Woolwich, on January 7th and 8th. The room in which the show was held is well lighted from the sides and ends, and possesses the advantage of being excellently lighted (splendidly at night), so that visitors at any time had the opportunity of seeing the birds well. The Rev. G. J. Bayley, the president, took a lively and personal interest in the show. The following constitute the committee: Messrs. E. Meades (chairman), A. Best (vice-chairman), J. J. Collins (treasurer), Allison, Borlase, Hawkes, Hall, Miller, Putney, and Underwood. The hon. secretaries are Messrs. Pawley and Newnham, whose courtesy, perseverance, enthusiasm, and attention to every detail were most marked. The entry, on the total, was 50 in excess of last year's; this increase being made up in the members' section, the open classes, particularly the Canaries, showing a reduction upon last year's total. This reduced entry Mr. Pawley attributed to the bitter weather conditions about the time the entries closed. The weather changed, but the mischief had been done, and the services of Mr. Gardner, as a second judge, were not required. We wish the society better luck next year. The quality throughout was excellent, particularly in the Mules and British bird sections. The staging and arrangement thereof were very convenient, the room was prettily decorated with flags, and each evening a splendid musical entertainment was provided by Mr. Hartland, and much appreciated. The prize labels were gummed on the bottom bars of the cages promptly, and catalogues of awards were on sale within three-quarters of an hour of the time of judging being completed. The special model prize cards were sent by post to each exhibitor entitled to same. The show was visited each evening by a large number of fanciers from all parts, and the "gate" was thus a success. Mr. J. Robson judged.

ROTHESAY.

The Buteshire United Fanciers held their 8th annual show in the Town Hall, on January 6th, and, taken all over, it was most successful. The entries in the cage bird section numbered just about the same as last year, but we think the quality was much better, some tip-top exhibits being staged. Mr. N. Lamont, M.P. for the county, visited the show, and was very interested in some of the exhibits, when being shown round by Mr. Councillor G. G. Hill, who is treasurer for the society. Mr. J. M'Crone makes a splendid secretary, being most courteous and obliging to all. His duties were lightened by the committee, who all worked hard to make the show a success. Mr. Allison (Paisley) judged the Scotch Fancies, while Mr. And. Wilson (Glasgow) took the British birds, and both jointly judged the remainder. Their awards seemed to give general satisfaction.

KILMARNOCK.

The Kilmarnock O.A. held their 17th annual show and competition (open to the United Kingdom) in the Agricultural Hall, on January 1st and 2nd. We regret to report that for once the venture was not a success, so far as the cage bird section was concerned, which is difficult to explain. The hall is a good one, the judges were popular, and the officials are too well known to admit of any doubt as to their ability to see to the comfort of both exhibite and exhibitors, and also of the visitors. It must have been a very great disappointment to Mr. Blane, the energetic and painstaking secretary, to feel compelled, after all his labours, to cancel every class in the Scotch Fancy and Norwich (Crest and Plainheads) sections. The only Canaries on view were the natty little Borders but here some exceedingly good specimens were shown. Mr. P. McKenzie, of Kelso, had a grand team forward, and captured the challenge cup. Having twice previously won it, it now becomes his own property. Quite a number of the Mule and Hybrid, British and Foreign bird classes were also cancelled, and altogether the number of exhibits was very disappointing. We wish these good fanciers better fortune another year, and an entry which will compensate them for the present disappointment. Mr. Allan Chalmers (Kirkintilloch) adjudicated on the Border classes, and Mr. Andrew Miller (Glasgow) on the remainder, and their awards gave general satisfaction.

HETTON-LE-HOLE (Durham.)

The 14th annual show was held on January 9th, in the Miners' Hall, Hetton, a suitable hall in every respect for a cage-bird show. Although an old-established society, this was the first time they have held an open show, and in launching out on their new venture the committee decided to give 18 classes for open competition. Entries did not come up to expectations, probably owing to their date of closing falling during the holidays, and also to the fact that the show was not held under C.B.U. rules. Three classes were cancelled, the remaining fifteen receiving a little over 100 entries. Members' entries came up well—about 150 in 17 classes. The quality of the exhibits throughout was of a very high order, many notable winners putting in an appearance, and in some instances having to take a back seat, notably Mr. H. Wilson's unfighted buff cock, winner of several firsts in strong classes at recent northern shows. The management left nothing to be desired, and the society is very fortunate in having such an energetic and obliging gentleman as Mr. Arthur Notley as the secretary. He was ably assisted by Mr. R. Allen, who was assistant secretary for the occasion. The exhibits were well looked after by a hard-working committee, composed of Mr. H. Wilson (chairman), Mr. G. Gowland (vice-chairman), and Messrs. Lawson, Common, Vipond, Newstead, Mugridge, Hann, Fenwick, Appleby, Cross, T. Wilson, Winn, and Brown. The whole of the open show exhibits were packed and despatched to the station by 5.30 p.m., and when we left at 7 o'clock the hall was quite cleared. We were very pleased to hear that the "gate" and ticket money constituted a record for the society, being far in excess of those of any previous year. A feature of the show was the display of members' specials down one side of the room, consisting of blankets, shawls, rugs, silk handkerchiefs, pictures, clocks, ornaments, lamps, etc., all splendid specials, and these proved a great attraction to the large number of lady visitors. Mr. E. Brunskill judged.

FOLKESTONE.

Annual show of the Folkestone and Dist. F.S. was held in the Town Hall, on January 12th and 13th. The hall is well lighted, and commodious, and free from draughtiness. A pleasing feature of the exhibition was that the cage birds were staged at a convenient height on the platform, and there was ample opportunity for visitors to see them well. From some reason not apparent the entries did not come up so well as had been expected, one cause to which this was attributed being the closing of entries a week before the show, but to have arranged otherwise would have created considerable difficulty in the compilation and issue of the catalogue. As may be imagined, in a town like Folkestone, the show was held under influential auspices. The committee who one and all worked excellently, consisted of Messrs. Witham-Wignall (chairman), A. E. Coleman (vice-chairman), Ashman, A. H. Gamball, Burgess, Collins, Davison, Diaac, Greenland, Osborne, Saunders, Sharpe, Tester, Weller, Wotton Mercer. That old and experienced fancier, Mr. L. A. Brett, had charge of the finances, and Mr. J. W. Gambrill ably, and at the same time, pleasantly, fulfilled the duties of hon. secretary and solicitor. Special for best cage bird was awarded to a magnificent Song Thrush, the property of Mr. Brett. British birds were a fine collection all through, and there were some charming Foreign specimens. Canaries made up in quality what they lacked in numbers. Mr. Geo. Gardner judged, and his awards met with general satisfaction.

KEIGHLEY.

Keighley and District C.B.S. held their annual exhibition under Yorkshire Union rules, and the patronage of the Y.C.C., in the Holycroft Council School on January 9th. Mr. W. A. Cowgill (Bradford) officiated as judge, his awards meeting with general satisfaction. The class for clear yellow Yorkshires was cancelled, owing to insufficient entries, and in two classes only half the prize-money was paid. The rest of the classes were fairly well filled, 270 birds being staged, and were throughout of a very high order of merit. Mr. Wm. Wright makes a first-class secretary, and can always rely upon getting plenty of assistance from his co-workers, Messrs. Berry, Booth B. Holmes, Shackleton, White, and Foster. Messrs. Addy and Trovener acted as judge's stewards.

A Chat with a Noted Breeder of Norwich and Yorkshire Canaries.

Mr. J. C. BARNES, of Sheffield, well known as a judge and a highly successful breeder and exhibitor of Norwich Plainheads and Yorkshires, tells of his methods of breeding and management.

Sheffield is not exactly one of the beauty spots of England. The myriad chimneys of this hive of industry, seen rolling forth dense clouds of "soupy" smoke, arouse the astonished interest of the onlooker, but arouse no desire to linger in their neighbourhood. But Sheffield has its oases—pleasant suburbs, wherein grass and trees and pleasant things flourish, and where the air blows sweet and refreshing to the senses. And in Sheffield, too, many good bird-lovers flourish, and many a champion bird first sees light of day. The Cutlery City, indeed, has a great reputation, so far as the number of its bird-breeders are concerned, the number of young birds they annually produce, and the number they stage at their annual show. So when the writer recently found himself "within the city walls," so to speak, with an hour or two to dispose of as best pleased him, what better, thought he, could he do than look up one of the local fanciers? To think was to act, and at the expenditure of a modest copper, he soon found himself bowling along in an electric car towards the heights of Walkley.

Mr. J. C. Barnes was the good fancier he had set himself to track down. This gentleman is now one of our popular judges—and an all-round one at that, though Norwich Plainheads and Yorkshires are the Canaries he keeps and breeds, and, up to a short time ago, exhibited with a full and consistent measure of success. He has the reputation, too, of being consistently successful in rearing plenty of young birds—here, thought his pursuer, is a chance to get a tip or two for the younger fanciers among the readers of CAGE BIRDS.

The city was quickly left behind, and Walkley reached. Once in Duncombe Street, we soon knew that our "luck was in," too, for Mr. Barnes was at home, and we were speedily shaking him by the hand, and greeting his good wife. And a reight good Yorksher greeting we got. What accompanied it we are not going to say, for it is birds we set out to talk about. Mr. Barnes was pleased to show me his rooms and his stock—as, indeed, he is anyone who calls upon him—and had no objection to disgorging at short notice a little of the accumulated experience of years of breeding and exhibiting. But before proceeding to the bird-rooms, we had a look at the fine collection of cups, medals, and all sorts of silver and plated ware which Mr. Barnes' birds brought him home from the shows; and we envied the owner. But as we had none too much time to spare, we reluctantly toro our eyes away and sought the feathered beauties.

The Roome and the Stock.

For the accommodation of his stock, which, as we have already observed, comprises the Norwich Plainhead and Yorkshire varieties, Mr. Barnes utilises two rooms. One is very spacious indeed, capitally lighted, and well ventilated. It is the topmost room of his house, and has two windows, one facing south-east, which allows the early morning sun to peep in (a most valuable asset during the breeding season), and the other pointing due south, thus catching "King Sol" for the greater portion of the day. Judging by the fine results Mr. Barnes obtains year after year, we should imagine a room with this aspect almost unbeatable. The other room is situated over a kitchen, and is of nice size, with a splendid light, practically all the front being glass, with an extra window in one end of the room. Herein are the large flights—14 in number—which provide ample space for a matter of 20 birds in each compartment. Mr. Barnes is a great believer in birds (especially youngsters) having plenty of wing exercise, considering this to assist them materially to develop bone and substance, and maintain sound health. The afore-mentioned large room he utilises for breeding and caging-off purposes. Upwards of 70 cages, all of uniform size (21½in. long by 16½in. high, by 11in. deep) are neatly arranged around two sides and one end. The other end is absolutely covered over with prize cards won at various All-England shows. The cages, we might add, are all enamelled blue inside, this being preferred to any other covering.

This last season or two Mr. Barnes has not exhibited much, on account of his judging engagements and work he does for the Fancy Press. A glance round his room tells me, however, that should he decide to return to the exhibiting side in earnest, he will be able to put the right sort down, birds that will hold their own in the keenest of competition. The breeding season of 1908 was one of the most successful Mr. B. has ever experienced, upwards of 220 youngsters being reared, amongst which were more than an average number of exceptional merit. In the Norwich the type all round was excellent, both in the old and young birds, and beautiful texture of feather had not been lost sight of even though substance was greatly in evidence. Colour this stock excels in. Carriage, too, is an item which Mr. Barnes studies. He likes a bird to move well from perch to perch, and detests those of sluggish temperament as much as he does one with bad wings, or a hinge-tail. He contends that the true Norwich should be a "happy-go-lucky" sort of a chap, always on the go, and not an "idler." The Yorkshires struck one very forcibly by reason of their typical character and stylish action. Position, quality, and length were pronounced great essentials in up-to-date specimens. Length of leg, plenty of daylight between, had not been overlooked; birds low on leg or stilty are looked upon as an eye-sore by Mr. B. To have selected any particular bird or birds for special mention in either the "chubby ones" or the "slim ones," would have been rather a difficult matter, so close in merit were they (though to have located a bad one would truly have been even harder); but we think we have said sufficient to make it clear that Mr. Barnes has a stock of birds, and two great stress upon; without the right kind of hens he holds progression is not going to be made. He is a stickler for type and quality. In two large flight cages we noticed a number of smart, well-feathered hens, all in the pink of condition, that looked capable of producing "class" progeny. They had bold, rounded heads, thick necks, deep chests, cobby bodies, and short wings and tails, points Mr. B. holds that the really good hen should excel in. They struck me as a superb lot.

A fair sprinkling of heavily marked birds, with several lovely greens, were to be seen, both cocks and hens. Mr. Barnes is a strong believer in dark blooded birds, either for Norwich or Yorkshire breeding, holding that depth of colour cannot be obtained without them. "Green is the fountain of colour," he says, and holds that he has proved it over and over again. It is significant that on five occasions, he has captured trophies of various descriptions, for the hottest-fed bird in the show, and that all his representatives have been marked (more or less) birds. No wonder he is so convinced upon the matter; and his opinion we feel inclined to endorse from our own experience.

"What age do you prefer your birds?" we asked.

"For breeding purposes," Mr. Barnes replied, "I prefer the cock to be the older bird, say, a two-year-old cock with a one-year-old hen. My experience is, that you get larger and stronger progeny then than you do when using a young cock to an old hen. As to which is best, buff cock and yellow hen, or vice-versa, I do not mind over much, but lean a little to the former, as the young-rooms, which any fancier might be proud to own. So we will turn to the practical side and record the hints Mr. Barnes was good enough to give us for the benefit of readers.

Breeding Couples.

On the male side in Norwich pairs, Mr. B. likes to have substance and colour. Size and colour are conveyed better from the cock side than from the hen; of that Mr. Barnes appears convinced. He should have a fair idea from the long experience he has undergone. He is not against a bird of size carrying a little more feather than one cares to see on a show-bird, as long as the bird is bred right and that such feather is of a silky texture. Most very large birds are inclined to be a little "free," as, of course, is well known throughout the Fancy. But a bird of this description must be paired up to a close-feathered hen. The hens Mr. B. lays sters I produce from a buff cock I fancy are generally of the best substance."

"What do you consider the hardest points to obtain?"

"Without doubt, good heads. Heads that are wide at entrance, rising nicely from a short beak, with bold eye and prominent cheeks. A bird with a good body and bad head is of very little use, and is one that you cannot improve much. A bird that has a good head, but is a little wanting in body, can often be assisted by judicious feeding. You can add to the body points to a certain extent, but to add to the head points is next to impossible."

"How do you get your quality of feather?"

"This is obtained by judicious pairing of one's stock—by degrees, for it cannot be accomplished in a "twinkling." By selecting, year after year, the best feathered birds, you will eventually fasten this very desirable item. A "ten minutes" fancier is not the man who pulls up many trees. It requires perseverance, and when results seem to go hard against you, that is the time you must put forth the greatest exertion. To overcome difficulties nothing succeeds like perseverance."

The Yorkshire Pairs.

In the Yorkshire cocks length and position must be in evidence to suit Mr. Barnes, with length of leg and thighs showing well; also good backs, well filled in, and neatly carried wings. Colour in this variety is, of course, not so important as in the Norwich Plainhead, at the same time, it must not be overlooked, as given two birds of equal merit, the one best fed would certainly take precedence. The hens, as in the Norwich, he holds, should excel in type and quality. Mr. B. must have "boxy" feathered damsels, as stylish and good in position as possible. Neat, narrow birds of good length find favour with him. He would much rather have a hen of medium size, that possessed rich quality and a good stand than an extra long hen that failed in position—perhaps of the curved order—and instead of being "shooty" was "hinge-tailed."

To Ensure Health.

"What do you consider the chief things to ensure healthy birds?"

"Cleanliness of the cages, clean water, gritty sand, and sweet, bold glossy seed. I give Spanish Canary seed as a staple food, with mixed seed twice a week. The latter comprises two parts Canary seed and one part German summer rape for the Yorkshires; a little hemp seed is added for the Norwich. I give a sprinkling of maw seed occasionally. Fresh air, a dry bird-room, absence of draughts, and a good light are also very necessary. If these things are assured, and unsound specimens are not bred with, one's stock will be always in the pink of condition. A little sweet apple can be placed between the wires now and again, say, twice a week, with very beneficial results during the winter months, and in the summer, either a few leaves of dandelion or a little fresh watercress."

Asthma in birds, Mr. Barnes considers, is brought about more often than not by the vitiated atmosphere of a room that is kept too "stuffy," ventilation being neglected. Mr. B. has top ventilation, and for fresh air to enter he either leaves the door ajar or has the window open. When the days are very cold, he prefers leaving the door open, but in summer, or when the weather is at all mild, open goes the window. As we glanced round his stock we could not locate even a single "pumpy" specimen, much less hear a "wheeze"; all appeared as merry and healthy as the proverbial jovial monks.

The Breeding Season.

Mr. Barnes generally allows the weather to guide him more or less when pairing up. About the middle of March he begins to make the necessary preparations. The birds tell him when they are ready to commence on matrimonial duties—though he does not always let them have their own way. If cold east winds are knocking about, "marriages" are put off until the "honeymoons" are more likely to be enjoyed. His interference may not be accepted in most cases with good grace, nevertheless he advises them, as it were, that it is far better to wait than to fall headfirst into disaster. Seriously, cold winds and chilly weather mean only misfortune. Weather permitting, however, Mr. B. pairs up his birds as they come into condition, assisting them about every other day with a little egg and bread food that has had a few grains of maw seed mixed with it. He always remembers to counteract the failings of each specimen in its mate. Success or non-success certainly depends on the manner in which one's stock is paired. Mr. B. is firmly convinced that the correct matching of the couples is the only road to correct breeding.

"What methods do you adopt for feeding purposes?"

"Egg and bread crumbs, with maw seed added (one teaspoonful to each half-pint of soft food, or thereabouts), is administered twice or three times a day, if possible, to the parent birds, during the bringing up of young. At the same time, I give a fair amount of hemp seed. I find birds almost prefer the hemp to the egg, and feed excellently upon it. For green food I use dandelion or watercress. Both I think well of. I advise readers not to give any green food until the young birds are about three days old. If given earlier it is apt to throw matters wrong. After this time, give it little and often, and you will do so with good results. German summer rape-seed that has been boiled for 15 minutes, then strained and let go cold, I give, as a change, say half a teaspoonful to each pair of birds per day; this they relish.

CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Two Wee Gems.

By J. PATTERSON.

A very interesting and practical article written to accompany the coloured plate of Border Fancy Canaries given with this issue.

I should be happy to see a pair of beauties such as those depicted in CAGE BIRDS. Such a picture will go a long way to make very clear to my younger readers just the sort of birds that are required for the ideal of the Border Fancy Canary. And as it is for that reason that the artist, Mr. Norman, has drawn this pair, I will endeavour to make this article both instructive and interesting by glancing into the bird's history, and seeing how it derived its name. The standard of excellenco adopted by the Border Fancy Canary Club gives one a capital idea of what is wanted; but at the same time I am aware that no pen can convey to the mind what will be seen in the picture at a glance.

The Border Fancy Canary up to the year 1890 was widely known under the title "Common Canary," and at the present day littlo difference can be seen in it except that year by year the members of the variety are getting more uniform in shape. Quality of feather, with nice level colour and condition have always been its most prominent points. The graceful movement so characteristic of it was also then as much sought after as it is now. You will therefore see that although it received the name of "Common Canary," its points of excellence were clearly defined, and were in no wise of a common order.

Derivation of the Present Name.

We have to thank our friends across the border for the movement which led to the change of name. A few of its admirers in Cumberland and district were the first to suggest "Cumberland Fancy" as the better name, maintaining that it had been bred longest in their midst. This seemed to stir the auld Scotch blood, fanciers across the border maintaining that they had the prior claim.

A very heated controversy was started in the Fancy Press (there was no CAGE BIRDS in those days) by someone (who signed himself "Veritas") calling the attention of Scotch breeders to what he considered a fact, viz., that their English brethren were trying to steal a march on them. That letter lies before me now, and I will quote a few of the remarks made: "Will you kindly allow me to ventilate a matter of great importance to fanciers of this variety," he starts off. "I see from schedules that the birds which have hitherto been known as "Common Canaries" are there designated "Cumberland Fancies." Now, from its symmetrical form, fine quality of feather, and other good properties, I think it is well entitled to a distinctive name, providing that name is appropriate, and one that will commend itself to the great body of fanciers who breed and exhibit it on both sides of the border." The writer here suggests the name "Border Fancy," asking those interested to call a meeting for the purpose of discussing the matter, bringing up a standard of points, etc., and forming a club.

From the remarks I have quoted one can see what a hold this wee charmer had on the minds of the leading fanciers at that time, i.e., eighteen years ago. This controversy caused a deal of feeling to arise on both sides of the Tweed. Finally two clubs were formed, one called the Cumberland Fancy Club and the other the Border Fancy Club. Each struggled against the other for a few seasons, but at last the Cumberland fanciers agreed to the name "Border Fancy," and judging from the rapid advancement the club has made, unity has been strength.

The B.F.C.C. Standard.

The following is the standard of excellence drawn up by the club. I will quote this, and my younger readers will do well to take careful note as I proceed of each point as depicted in the coloured plate.

The grand essentials of the Border Fancy are type and quality; without these it is worthless. In both the birds depicted we have quality and type to perfection. The yellow cock, having more style, may be considered the finer in this point. The bird should be clean-cut, lightly made, compact, proportionately rounded on both back and front, sprightly, etc., and showing no tendency to heaviness, but having rather a grand, graceful symmetry throughout. We may say that both birds are equal in all points here, except for sprightliness, wherein the yellow cock excels.

Head: Small, round, and neat looking bill, fine; eyes, dark (if not pink-eyed) and bright, showing health; neck, rather fine; that is, nice and free, giving one the impression that it rests on the shoulder with a fine balanced spring, moving graceefully from side to side when the cage is handled. This is a point I think very much of, and I have no hesitation in stating that it is the finishing point to a good Border, and draws a host of admirers year by year. Such action seems to charm the eye of all, and anyone taking up the Fancy should take care that they receive birds as nearly equal in fineness of head and neck as those depicted. Return all "bull-necked" birds as useless if they are had on approval.

The birds run a very equal race here, too. The buff cock looks a shade thicker, but this is only as it should be. Should your birds run too thick in the neck, a good plan is to double-yellow them, and I find that the use of a yellow cock of sound yellow throughout (even down to the web) and a hen of a lemon shade of colour, acts like magic in many cases. The hen being pale in colour is little removed from a good coloured buff, and this does not throw the colour either cloudy or dull, as we get from a high-coloured hen, and when the progeny are paired up to buffs in the usual way the following season, you will find a great improvement. The method also shortens the feather. But it has, at the same time, many drawbacks, and should be resorted to as seldom as possible.

Points About the Body.

The body: Back well filled and nicely rounded, running in almost a straight line from the gentle rise over the shoulder to the point of tail; chest, similar, giving the impression that if measured from the centre it would be equally balanced down half-way to the legs; it should be neither heavy nor prominent. On the other hand, avoid a thin and pinched-fronted bird, as such will nearly always frill badly. The breeder's art consists in knowing the happy medium and how to breed out the heavy-fronted kind of bird.

The wings: Compact, and carried close to the body. But at the same time, one should see they are neatly laid on giving his bird a finished appearance. The wings should neither spread down nor be carried tight, as is seen at times, as though half hidden in the body feathers.

They must neither fall down nor cross. Many birds fail here, and mainly in the latter respect, and one must be careful to find out the cause before pairing up. Sometimes it may be caused by nervousness, but it is mostly by the wing being longer than the body. At other times the bird may be too narrow at the shoulder and rather pointed at the butts; such birds are now far behind, and should be entirely discarded from the breeding stock, or you may have no end of trouble.

Again looking at our pair here, we find the yellow cock beating the buff hands down, as by casting the eye from his back downwards, we find that his wings do not cover the rump properly, which leaves a slight opening in the inner flights. The yellow is perfection here.

The faults I wish to point out are wings badly carried all down the side, or only meeting at tips, and not covering the back all the way down from a little before where the thigh is seen. Birds having them are not worth a card in strong company.

A Record Schedule and a Record List of Judges.

It is our pleasant duty this week to review the schedule of the 50th Crystal Palace Cage-Bird Show. # The Coming "Jubilee" Crystal Palace Show.

INTERVIEW WITH THE SHOW MANAGER.

All About the Great Event from the Lips of Mr. J. W. Ramsden.

A "Jubilee" cage-bird show—the fiftieth annual event of its kind! What visions those words may well conjure up in one's mind; of old-time methods, of bygone birdie champions, of faces of fancier friends now stilled in that "long sleep, Death"; of personal triumphs on the show-bench—indeed, of many things, both grave and gay. But it is not with the past that we have now to deal. The forthcoming great event at the Crystal Palace claims attention—a unique happening in the annals of our hobby. The great National Show is at all times an event of the first magnitude—probably it is not too much to allude to it as the event of the cage-bird fanciers' season—and this year it takes on an immensely added importance and interest by reason of being the "Jubilee" exhibition held at the Sydenham "Glass-house." It is for this reason that a representative of CAGE BIRDS sought out Mr. J. W. Ramsden, the highly-popular and able show manager, and obtained a few particulars direct from his lips concerning the eagerly anticipated event of February 5th to 9th next. Mr. Ramsden is a busy man just now, as will readily be imagined, but with that courtesy which distinguishes him gladly answered the CAGE BIRDS man's questions, and supplied some interesting details.

"Mr. Ramsden," we opened, "this year's Crystal Palace Show promises to be a notable event. What are you doing to celebrate it?"

"Yes," replied Mr. Ramsden; "judging by present indications, this year's show promises to be specially attractive—indeed, I trust it will break all records. It is again held under the auspices of the L. and P.O.S., and this year under the sole management of myself. Great interest is being taken in this show, and it is supported by practically every Specialist Club; also by the Victorian Canary Society of Australia, whose representative, Mr. White, you will remember, paid us a visit two years ago, and made many friends during his brief stay. For this—the "Jubilee" Show—the classification has been extended; 148 classes have been provided, and nearly 300 special prizes are offered for competition. The new classes are: Lancashire Coppy (Novice), Lancashire Plainhead (Novice), Frills, London Fancy, Bullfinch Hen, Yellowhammer, Chough, extra class for large Softbill British, also Tanagers. We are, too, giving extra cash prizes. The L. and P.O.S. give an extra cash prize in every class, while CAGE BIRDS (as you will know) has kindly offered to give a cash special of two shillings for the best v.h.c. in every class in the show that has not less than 25 entries, and the L. and P.O.S. will also give a cash prize of 2s. for the best h.c. in every class in the show containing 25 or more entries."

"That seems generous treatment; for, of course, the entry fee remains the same as in previous years?"

"Yes; the entrance fee remains at 2s. The prize-money comes to a certain 34s. in all full classes, with the probability of it being 38s. And even with this, of course, there will be no departure from our usual practice of giving further prizes (extra 2nds, extra 3rds, etc.) in classes where the support given warrants this being done."

"Are there any other special departures this year?"

"Yes; we have engaged a record number of judges, viz., 18, all specialists, and the classes allotted to them have been limited in number in order that each judge shall have ample time to give every exhibit his careful attention. Further, a special jubilee championship diploma has been designed, and will be given to the best bird in each of the champion sections. A special jubilee award certificate has also been printed, and any winner can have his awards certified on this certificate (price 1s., post free). Medals (gold, silver, bronze) in specially inscribed cases can be had in lieu of prize money, and in every instance they are full value. Samples can be seen at the show.

"In the event of a 'cold snap' occurring at the time appointed for the holding of the show, will the birds be comfortably protected against the weather? The Palace, you know, has been 'hauled over the coals' (pardon what looks like an attempt at a joke!) in the matter of alleged deficiencies during very cold spells."

"Special efforts will be made to protect exhibits from both cold and draughts. The Crystal Palace Company has kindly promised that the show shall be held under separate cover in the Palace, and kept at a suitable temperature. Needless to say, I shall do my own best to attain this end, and the improvements introduced last year will, I think, be found further perfected, and quite adequate. I may also say that for the protection of exhibits in another direction, the society will provide policemen, attendants, and night watchmen, on the same scale as last year."

"And if you get the record entry you hope to be favoured with, how will you, in the limited time at your disposal, handle and stage the wonderful collection of birds this will represent, so that there may be no confusion, no mistake, no delay?"

"By having a system and sticking to it. The L. and P.O.S., as I have said on a previous occasion, is blessed with about the finest lot of committee-men that ever lived. They invariably turn up at the shows in good time, eager for the fray. Some twenty trained and experienced packers are engaged, and one or two allotted to each committee-man. As the birds arrive, the day before the show opens, they are unpacked and checked off by an official, after which they are fed and watered, and placed in their proper order on the show-benches by the packers. As a rule, we get through this part of the work by about 12 o'clock (midnight). Committee-men are then allotted sections, and have to see that every bird is not only in its proper class, but in its proper numerical order. This is usually got through by two or three o'clock, and then a few hours' rest is obtained at a house in the neighbourhood. We get back to the show by 7 o'clock a.m., and usually find a few birds have arrived by the early morning trains. Provided these were sent off in proper time, and the delay is not the fault of the exhibitor, they are at once unpacked and staged. I walk round the show to see everything is in proper order, the feeders are set to work, the show swept up, and all is ready for the judges at 9 o'clock. As the judges' slips are handed in, the prize cards are at once made out, and put up immediately by the committee-men. As the specials are awarded the same thing occurs. About now our worthy president, Mr. Crabb, gets busy gathering all the information possible for the benefit of the reporters of the great London papers, who always report this show. The judging over in good time, the curtain is rung up as the clock strikes three (after the judges' lunch is over), and thanks to the promptitude of those excellent show printers, Messrs. J. J. Keliher and Co., catalogues with the awards in are on sale soon after 6 o'clock."

"About the crowds of fanciers from various parts of the country who are sure to come up to town to see the "Jubilee" run—its course, of course: what arrangements are you making on their behalf?"

"I have been in personal communication with the various managers. Most of the railway companies are running excursions specially for the show, full details of which will be published in CAGE BIRDS in due course."

"I believe the Norwich Plainhead Club and the Southern N.P.C. are to fight out their inter-club contest at the 'Jubilee'?"

"That is so. The long-looked-for contest between the N.P.C. and the S.N.P.C. takes place at this show. Four extra cash prizes are offered in each class, making a total of nine cash prizes per class. It ought to be a stern fight, and result in a magnificent display of this popular Canary."

"Are there any other points you would like put before our readers?"

"I should like to make it quite clear that the show is open to all—whether affiliated members of the C.B.U. or not. I would say, too, that once again Messrs. Carters supply the foods for the seed-eating birds, and Messrs. Trower and Co. for the Softbills. The Softbill British and Foreign will be under the personal care of the two veteran feeders, Messrs. Small and Grutchfield."

"Speaking of Messrs. Small and Grutchfield," continued Mr. Ramsden, "I have been asked by one or two regular exhibitors at the Palace Show to suggest that the 'Jubilee' Show would be a suitable place for some recognition to be made to these two veterans, who have fed and tended the exhibits at the National Shows so well for over forty years. I shall be pleased to receive subscriptions, no matter how small, from exhibitors who would like in this way to recognise Messrs. Small and Grutchfield's long and faithful services."

"Are you making any special arrangements to cope with the tremendous amount of work there is likely to be at the close of the show?"

"That is a point I am always most particular upon, and this year very special efforts will be made to clear the show on the evening of the last day. To ensure this, the show will close at 4 o'clock, and it is hoped that the last bird will be dispatched by the 10.10 p.m. train, which will connect with the night expresses out of London. All birds should be home early the next day."

"Speaking of 'veterans' reminds me that the 'Jubilee' is to be the last official appearance of two of your oldest judges—is that not so?"

"The 'Jubilee' Show is the last show at which the two veteran British bird judges, Messrs. S. Cook and J. F. Hills, will officiate as judges. It is the intention of the L. and P.O.S. to present to each of them the society's gold medal as a mark of esteem, and as a memento of their last Palace Show (in an official capacity). The presentation will be made at the judges' lunch, and I hope a good company will assemble to show their appreciation of Messrs. Cook's and Hills' long and valued services. The judges' lunch will be held in the Grill Room, on the Friday, covers at 1.30. Tickets, 2s. 6d. each, can be had by exhibitors and friends on application to the show manager. The lunch will be over in time for the opening of the show. Ladies are specially invited. Our old friend, Mr. Crabb, will take the chair."

"This will surely be a show well supported by the 'trade,' and result in a highly interesting and instructive display of foods, cages, and appliances generally?"

"I am pleased to say that the 'trade' are supporting the show well. The following have booked spaces for stalls:—Messrs. Carter, Hyde, Trower, Newley, CAGE BIRDS, Millsum, Sissons, Hammond, Roehl, and Fox and Sons, and I have several other firms enquiring—for floor space. As you say, the display of goods should be a very fine one."

Thinking he had by now trespassed sufficiently on Mr. Ramsden's time and good nature, CAGE BIRDS representative prepared to take his departure, and thanked Mr. Ramsden for his kindness in favouring readers with so many details.

"Not at all," replied that genial gentleman, "tell them that, as a record entry is expected, to cope with such, entries must close January 23rd, and exhibitors are respectfully requested to send their entries as soon as possible—not to wait until the day fixed for closing. If they will bear this in mind, I shall be more than repaid. All prize-money will be paid as soon as possible after the closing of the show."

Just as we prepared to dive into the rain and slush of London, came these parting words:—"I should like you to add that I have the letting of rooms (including the Board Room) for meetings during the show, and that all applications for their use should be made to me."

Results of Our . . . . Xmas Competitions.

Some very Interesting Answers to a set of Interesting Questions.

The two competitions in connection with our Christmas Number attracted a splendid entry from readers, and keen struggles for the prizes resulted.

The Coloured Frontispiece.

The quality of the work accomplished by competitors in the coloured frontispiece competition was remarkably good—quite the best we have ever been favoured with—and the task of deciding upon the winner was one of some difficulty. We were pleasantly surprised at the artistic effect attained by the senders of the leading paintings—a distinct advance on anything which reached us the previous year. The judges eventually selected the frontispiece sent in by

89, King's Road,
Essex.

as the highest in merit, and to this gentleman a cheque for half-a-guinea will be forwarded in due course. This competitor, readers may remember, very nearly carried off the prize last year. Following very closely upon his heels came Mr. Walter Collins (Norfolk Road, Southampton), Second Prize; and Miss Beatrice Smith (Worcester Park, Surrey), Third Prize. These three efforts we intend to have framed, and to exhibit them upon our stall at the forthcoming Crystal Palace Show. Fourth position was gained by Miss M. E. Palmer (Herne Bay). This lady secured our cash prize last Christmas.

Other very meritorious efforts reached us from Miss Laura Mead (St. Annes-on-Sea), and Messrs. G. W. Lifton (Gloster), J. Edwards (Longton), S. R. Sleep (Plymouth), G. Stott (Braintree), P. Jowett (Great Horton), J. Duncan (North Shields), J. W. Goldsmith (Maidenhead), W. H. Criddeford (Honiton), C. F. Hayman (Parkstone), T. A. Cooper (Nottingham), F. Ridgway (Wolstanton), Bernard Shaw (Haywards Heath), and W. J. Burgess (Clapham), while several juvenile fanciers also sent in promising attempts, notably the Misses Whitton (Broughty Ferry), A. M. Howard (Worthing), and S. Thorpe (Wellington), and Masters Russell Reeve (Norwich), F. Marwood (Thornaby-on-Tees), T. Griffiths (Gateshead), G. Fulbrook (Reading), H. Brotherhood (Newport, Salop), P. W. Streat (Exeter), V. S. Wainwright (Peascake), G. H. Needham (Leicester), and A. Wilkinson (Colne).

OUR CONUNDRUMS.

We also offered four prizes of half-a-crown each for the best answers to four given questions.

QUESTION 1.—WHICH IS THE BEST BREED OF CANARY FOR THE BEGINNER—AND WHY?

The prize is awarded to Mr. A. Sutherland Grant for the following on

THE NORWICH PLAINHEAD.

Of the "class" Canaries the Norwich stands without a rival as the Canary par excellence for the beginner. Why? (1) It has been bred to "type" through so many successive generations that that point may be regarded as fixed. (2) It is hardy and robust. (3) It doesn't unduly tax the patience of the novice in the matter of training as do some of the other varieties. (4) Good birds always find a ready sale and claim a good price, thus remunerating one for the time and trouble spent on them.—A. SUTHERLAND GRANT, 5, Bridge Street, Kirkcudbright.

Question 2.—Should legitimate "preparation for show" include the removal of a few objectionable feathers?

THE PRIZE WINNER.

Of course not. An honest breeder's aim should be to breed birds to type if he can, not to try and deceive everybody but himself into believing that he has reached the goal, when it is nothing more than a "try." Show the birds just as we have coaxed Nature to fulfil our wishes. Good-bye to all confidence that a novice has in buying a bird at a show if such a practice is allowed. I imagine his rooted conviction after, that "things are not always what they seem." Practise it ourselves and encourage others to play the straight game for the credit of the Fancy and the uplifting of all connected with it.—GEORGE HARRIS, 3, Bourne Cottages, Kenley, Surrey.

Question 3.—Is it desirable that Exhibition British Birds should be Colour-fed?

THE WINNING REPLY.

Colour-feeding British birds has never been proved to be injurious or even unnatural. Indeed, experience proves otherwise; and the depth and lustre it adds to colour, also the heat it gives during the moulting process (a circumstance which speaks for itself), is indisputable. As we know, however, it only improves certain colours (red for instance, is rather spoiled by colour-feeding). Were colour-feeding to be in future a cause for disqualification, then the difficulty of detecting a colour-fed bird would in some cases, at least, be insurmountable. It is desirable, therefore, that the question be left an open one, and that exhibitors continue to feed their birds according to their knowledge and experience of their requirements.—EDWARD MILNE, Woodlands Cottage, Rattray, Blairgowrie.

Question 4.—Which is best, an outdoor or an indoor birdroom—and why?

THE PRIZE ANSWER.

An outdoor bird-room is better than an indoor for the following reasons: (1) An indoor bird-room is almost of necessity upstairs, which entails a lot of running up and down stairs, especially during the breeding season, when fresh food should be given three times a day. (2) The birds are of a hardier nature when bred in an outdoor bird-room, as they do not get such extremes of temperature caused by the warmth during the day from the kitchen underneath, or the chimney that passes through the room from the downstairs room fires which at night (the coldest time) are unlighted. (3) The bird-breeding hobby causes a certain amount of dirt which our good mothers and wives much prefer outside their little palaces.—H. CHRISTIAN, 128, Westcotes Drive, Leicester.

A host of highly interesting replies came to hand, and next week we shall print a selection of these.

Foreign Birds for Beginners.

By FRANK FINN, B.A., F.Z.S.,
Author of "Pets and How to Keep Them."

A companion article to Mr. Goodchild's coloured plate which is presented with this issue.

Although the Foreign Bird Section at shows, owing, no doubt, to the unpractical way in which it is too often managed, cannot compare for efficiency and popularity with the British, the cult of foreign birds as home pets maintains its popularity, and it is probably even increasing. Among foreigners the Finches, being usually small and always easily fed, have the greatest vogue with most people, and in our illustration Mr. Goodchild has aptly delineated a group of attractive little creatures calculated to make a foreign bird fancier of anyone with a spark of enterprise in his or her nature.

First, the Aviary.

Such a collection as this would make a charming group for an outdoor aviary, which need not be very large, but must be so situated and constructed as to exclude damp and cold winds—the most deadly foes to bird life. As much sun as can be had is desirable, but, of course, the birds must have opportunity of seeking the shade when they desire it. A very good plan is to have glass shutters over the front of the aviary, so that in extra bad weather these can be closed, due provision having been made for ventilation by holes under the eaves along these shutters.

If an outdoor flight, netted over, and planted with grasses and shrubs, can be attached to the aviary, it will look much prettier, and, of course, will be a more enjoyable home for the little inmates; but they will thrive quite well without it. Indeed, with proper attention to feeding and avoidance of draughts, the whole collection would thrive well in one of those big Crystal Palace cages—so often miscalled aviaries—indoors; though in such a place it might be found advisable to shut off one or two of the bigger species depicted, by one of the slides, in case they show signs of a tyrannical disposition.

It would not be half a bad plan for an amateur who liked being comfortable, and only kept a few small pretty birds like these, to construct quite a small, cheap aviary for their use during the summer, and to bring them in and keep them in a large cage indoors during the winter. He would thus have the benefit of their company indoors at a time when going down a damp, chilly garden to attend to an aviary is a very doubtful pleasure, while the birds themselves, though they might, and in most cases would, winter perfectly well outside, would very probably be happier within. For my experience in studying animal life inclines me to believe that in most cases a temperature agreeable to ourselves is comfortable for the lower animals also, whether they come from tropical or temperate regions; it was quite a common sight in India to see some of the native birds gasping with heat in the hot season, and on the other hand everyone knows how our hardy Robin is quite ready to come indoors when circumstances are favourable for his doing so.

Feeding the Finches.

Feeding is an important matter with these little foreign Finches. Millet and Canary seed will be their staple diet, and of the millets the very small kind and the large white are the best, while this seed is especially appreciated in the spray.

Hayseed will also be enjoyed by the birds, most of which are naturally grass-feeders, and a good supply of flowering grass—the best all-round green food, as well as the most easily obtainable—should be regularly kept up. It is best, if possible, especially for birds kept indoors in a cage, to give it with roots and soil adhering, as then they have a chance of picking up any tit-bits these may contain. Other green food, such as chickweed and shepherd's purse, should be offered, and especially any such weeds which harbour aphides or "green fly," a particularly suitable diet for the little Avadavats and other Waxbills.

These delicate little creatures will be especially benefited by a little soft food if they can be got to eat it, and every attempt should be made to cultivate a taste for it by sprinkling it with seed. The said soft food may be any mixture suitable for small insectivorous birds, or the ordinary egg-food given to breeding Canaries. It will be especially beneficial when the birds are newly imported, moulting, breeding, or outdoors in winter—when, in fact, they need some extra easily-assimilable nourishment. Grit and cuttle-fish bone must not be forgotten; the latter is especially appreciated by the birds when it is shredded into fine shavings.

Accommodation for Breeding.

A good many of our little collection will probably attempt breeding, and they should be provided with varied accommodation to this end. Good thick bushes fastened up well out of the reach of mice are as good as anything, and in addition artificial sites in the way of the little wooden German Canary cages with the inside fittings removed, or the simple expedient of an ancient straw hat nailed against the wall, with a hole cut out of the crown, may be recommended.

Caged birds must not be expected to breed unless the whole flight can be given up to one pair, and not often then.

Having thus given, I hope, some idea of how to accommodate the subjects of our plate, I will proceed to make a few remarks about them in detail. Some are very common and cheap, some scarcer and dearer, some hardy, others rather delicate. Personally, I never look down on a bird because it is cheap and common, always provided it is pretty; beauty is never likely to be too abundant in this part of the world, and it is a reason for thankfulness that so many of the easiest birds to get and keep are among the prettiest of all. If only the foreign bird people took the trouble to encourage cheap common birds that the British section do, I feel sure our shows would be more attractive.

The Common Avadavat.

I shall therefore start off right away with the cheapest and commonest of the lot, because he is, perhaps, the best bird of all. The common Avadavat (Estrelda amandava) is one of the very oldest of foreign cage birds, and owes his very name to a corruption of Ahmedabad, the city whence they were sent, and had the reputation of coming. Many people still spell the name Amadavat or Amaduvade, but Avadavat is the accepted spelling, and occurs in the works of the poet Keats—the only instance I know of a foreign Finch being mentioned in classical English poetry.

This fairy-like little fellow is only about as large as our Wren, and his lovely plumage of rich red, dotted with white, comes out admirably in the plate. He only bears this when in full colour; half the time he is in undress, and then resembles the hen, which is a little brown creature, with a red patch at the base of the tail, and a few of the characteristic white dots on the wings. The young birds are entirely brown, with black instead of red and black bills, but I do not remember ever having seen them in so young a stage as this in English dealers' hands.

This little bird is widely spread over eastern countries, ranging through India and Burma into the islands of the Malay Archipelago, for I cannot accept the theory that the Burmese race, which has the abdomen of the cock yellow instead of black, is distinct, the difference not being important enough.

It is a very favourite cage bird with natives in India, being easily caught and kept. To quote my friend Mr. D. Dewar, in his recent book, "Birds of the Plains," "The bird takes to cage life as a Scotsman to whisky. Within five minutes of capture the little creature is contentedly eating its seed, and singing quite gaily. This is no exaggeration. I was recently out with a friend, when we came upon a small boy catching Munias (Munia is the native name applied to Waxbills and Mannikins.) We saw captured a fine cock, which my friend purchased for two annas (2d.). Not happening to have a cage in his pocket, he put the tiny creature into a fold in his handkerchief, and placed the remainder of the handkerchief in his pocket. While we were walking home our captive began twittering in answer to his companions who were still free. If this be not philosophical behaviour, I do not know what is."

A SINGING MATCH IN THE STATES.

The Yankee Reporter at a Bird Show.

The appended report of a "singing contest," which is said to have taken place at a show held in the famous Madison Square Gardens (New York), affords a fine example of the "humour" indulged in by reporters across the "herring pond." Our American contemporary states:—

It was not without incident that the Poultry and Pet Stock Show closed last night in Madison Square Garden. While the poultry and duck people were booking orders and closing deals, a match of much import was being decided in the Fancy Cage Bird Society's quarters in the cafe as to the singing abilities of two Mule Canaries. John McCartney backed his young ambitious Mule bird to out-sing M. J. Perkinson's old broken-legged bird, while Edward Burns bet that neither would sing. The birds were placed on a table, and with much solemnity the audience seated itself in a circle some ten feet away—that is, the front row.

No one spoke, and the only disturbance was tobacco smoke in the atmosphere. McCartney's bird, instead of getting down to business, persisted in poking an inquiring head through the bars of his cage, "looking for trouble," one of the critics in the audience said.

Glued to His Perch.

Perkinson's broken-legged veteran was glued to his perch, with the expression of a man who had gritted his teeth and made up his mind neither to yell nor whimper.

Such was the conduct of the rival birds. Thus sat the audience while time sped. An hour went by and some one in a back seat crept silently to the row of birds on exhibition, quietly lifted a cage containing four hens and silently placed them on the table between the rivals. Feminine allurements, however, had no effect, Perkinson's broken-legged warrior was adamant, and McCartney's more impetuous representative, if anything, peeked through the bars of his cage more jerkily and oftener.

After another hour a voice in the front row said: "Bill, take them females away. They're worrying my young birds." The females were whisked away, and the dumb songsters were left to their own inclinations to enliven matters.

Burns Calls "Time."

Neither bird, however, changed his earlier demeanour, nor was the irksome monotony broken until "Ted" Burns said:—"I win. The three hours is up, and neither bird's so much as wheezed a note."

McCartney in defence said, "My young 'un ain't used to such a audience." Perkinson in excuse said, "Guess a snowstorm's coming and it bothered my old bird's game leg."

UNDER THE WHITE ROSE.

THE Cinnamon Marked Y.C.C. hold a committee meeting to-day (Saturday), in conjunction with Windhill Show, when very important business is to be transacted, viz., the arrangement, etc., of specials for the year's competitions. The acting secretary, Mr. H. H. Towers, hopes for a good muster of members.

SHIPLEY and District O.S. whist drive and social takes place on Tuesday evening next, the 19th inst., in the cafe adjoining Saltaire Station. The committee hope to see plenty of fanciers and friends. They guarantee to provide a pleasant evening, and as the place is very easy of access from all parts, they expect to have a bumper. Don't forget them.

KEIGHLEY Society's Show, held on Saturday last, proved a really nice affair. Entries, with one or two exceptions, came up very well, and some grand birds were to be seen. The Yorkshire Novices were a strong lot, and gave the judge a heap of work. Many of their birds, in his opinion, would easily hold their own in the open classes.

BRADFORD East O.S. held their second annual tea, concert, and prize distribution on January 5th, in the Park Chapel Schools, when at least 200 members and friends, with their wives, sat down to a substantial tea. This was followed by an excellent concert, half-way through which Mrs. E. Suddards, the wife of the esteemed president, handed to the successful winners the magnificent prizes offered for competition. This society has had some excellent members' shows, lectures, etc., and all have been exceptionally well attended, the average for the 26 meetings being just upon thirty—truly a record which speaks well for the enthusiasm infused into the society since its formation. The rose bowl, which they have obtained for competition in the Unflighted classes at their show, was on view, and is a truly splendid prize, and should do much towards making their first open show a thorough success.

LAST season, when the competitions of the various clubs were half-way through, a list of points was published in this column for the guidance of exhibitors, with a view to whipping up those who, with a spurt, had a chance of getting in the running. This season there have been many enquiries for a similar list. The reason of its non-appearance is that several societies thought it would have a tendency to check entries from those out of the running, and therefore it has been deferred till the end of the season.

*A Methodical Bather.

We used to have a Canary which would come out of his cage and go into the bath that was waiting for him. Then he would go and sit himself before the stove and dry himself. We also had a cat that was nine years old, but he would never touch the bird.—Sent by Albert Armes (age 10), 1 (back of 62), Ladywood Road, Birmingham.

A Fight for a Meal.

A few weeks ago I stood watching two birds in my garden. They were fighting very savagely for the possession of a worm. So intent were they to see which was to have the meal that they did not notice that they stood in danger of being made a meal of. Suddenly a large Cyprus cat jumped over the wall right on the spot where the birds were a moment before. The birds then took to flight. I ran down the garden and the cat sprang back over the wall. I saw the worm struggling on the ground, so neither of them had the meal.—Sent by H. W. Green (aged 9½), 48, Marlborough Road, Norwich.

*A Happy Find.

One day my friend and I were going round his father's field and we saw a Blackbird with some white feathers in each of its wings. My friend said he would try and catch it. So one day it was feeding in the pigs' trough and he went towards it, and it fled into the building, being very wild. So he shut the door and caught it. After he had had it two or three days he was tired of it, and bought it off him. I have a delight in keeping birds. One day our cat got on the cage, and if I had not been there she would have had the poor Blackbird. She had broken some of the bars in the cage, and it had got out. As it happened, it was cramped in the wings and could not fly very much, and I managed to catch it.—Sent by F. Tudor (age 14), 8, Castle Street, Clun, Salop.

METHOD OF MAKING HEAD HOLES.

Sent by J. H. Dawson, 3, The Green, Washington Village, Durham.

Here is a food or water hole that is very easy to produce when making cage fronts. Take a piece of wire, and bend it over a round piece of wood (or anything round) the size required. Then put it through the punched bar (see "A" and "B"), and solder it. Then put the wires in position, and solder them (at "C" and "D"). When finished, I find it makes a very useful hole.—J. H. DAWSON.

HEATING APPARATUS FOR OUTDOOR AVIARY.

Sent by J. Vaughan, Ashmoor Place, Kington, Herefordshire.

I trust the enclosed idea will prove useful to fanciers who have outdoor aviaries. It costs next to nothing, providing you have a hurricane lamp by you and an empty cask. Mine is a soda cask (cost 3d.), with perches nailed all round it (nails driven from the inside to secure perches on the outside). I hang the cask to the top of the aviary with copper wire; also hang the lamp inside the cask with wire. At first my birds were shy of it, but now I find them perched all round looking nice and warm. One quart of oil lasts a week, costing 2½d. This is the second year I have used it, with good results.—J. VAUGHAN.

SPRING BIRD MUSIC IN JANUARY.

Nightingales Greet the New Year.

On New Year's Day, the song of the Nightingale was heard in a garden near the High Street, Carshalton, a Surrey village, thirteen miles from London. The bird was not caged, but roaming free in the garden, subject to all weather changes. How did it get there? It is an interesting little story, and one that readers of CAGE BIRDS should hear, because it teaches us one or two lessons worth remembering. I have for years been an enthusiastic lover of Skylarks, simply for the excellence of their song, and have possessed many accomplished singers, besides various other species. In an enthusiastic moment I conceived the idea of roofing in the whole of my garden with wire netting, making it into one huge aviary 60ft. long, by 30ft. wide. This was no easy matter, for besides the expense there was the difficulty of getting suitable supports and stretching the wire properly. Fir poles were used for the rafters, and stouter ones for the uprights, these latter having tall growing plants of ivy planted at their base, thus giving an old appearance to the place at once. The fruit trees were left growing against the wall, also the standard apple trees and roses, the creepers, the grass lawn, etc., as in an ordinary garden, so that the birds should have as much shelter as possible, and all the natural surroundings of wild life. This work was carried out during the winter, and when the spring arrived the birds were turned in. These included several cock Goldfinches, Linnets, Canaries, and hen Bullfinches; also a pair of Chestnut-eared Finches, as representatives of the foreign section. All these, in a sense, were only the padding of the aviary, the real centre being a pair of charming Nightingales, as it was intended to try and breed some of these delightful songsters, but the pair unfortunately proved to be two cock birds. One of these was exceedingly shy, and nothing but a deftly thrown mealworm would tempt him from his hiding place. The other was more tractable, and after a time would snatch a worm from the hand. In this garden they naturally found a good deal of insect food, and they were actually seen eating ordinary earth worms. The breeding operations during the summer months were not altogether a success, because the wild cock Bullfinches more than once disturbed the hens just at the critical moments, when young Hybrids were well upon the road to being successfully reared. Although this part of the aviary was practically a failure, there were no two questions about the charm of the place. The wire top was quite unnoticed, and one could sit under the growing trees and watch the pretty ways of the birds, who disported themselves with all the abandon of the fields and hedgerows. The Finches were for ever singing; the Nightingales occasionally joined in the music, and a lovely cock Blackcap was constantly recording his charming melody. And so the summer passed, with hours spent in their company and many chats upon future operations. Chill autumn came, with Canaries, Finches, and 'gales still at liberty, and then came a sharp November frost, with the water in the drinking basin frozen solid. Through all this the birds looked perky and bright. Christmas came, bringing the heavy snow, which laid thickly in the village streets and gardens. The severity of the frost was such that many water pipes were frozen, and the ground was hard as granite. Little was done for the protection of the inmates of the garden, for a few evergreen shrubs afforded them as much shelter as they would get in the open. About every hour the soft food was brought in and thawed for their benefit, and strange to say, through this severe time, the Nightingales of all the inmates showed the least inconvenience. They appeared practically unaffected. They would run over the snow for a mealworm or fresh food, with all the agility of Wagtails, but would occasionally hold up one foot as though the frozen mantle was cold to their feet; whereas the Finches looked bundles of feathers, cold and miserable, and as if life under such conditions was hardly worth living. Then came the change in the weather, and with it a sudden thawing of the snow. Going to feed my pets on New Year's Day, I was astonished to hear the singing of the Nightingales. Both birds were at it, commencing with the well-known scolding note. They warbled with all the abandon of the first spring arrivals, and although the snow had not completely disappeared, one could close one's eyes and fancy it was the month of May, and that the song proceeded from the hedgerow or wooded dell, where the primrose and nodding bluebells gave colour to the scene. The singing of the birds after passing through such an ordeal proves how hardy these birds really are. Our fine Blackbirds and Thrushes under such conditions could not do more, even if they did as much. To my mind it proves up to the hilt that the migration of the Warblers is brought about more by scarcity of food than inability to withstand our climate.

WILD BIRD NOTES.

Gulls and the Weather.

Hundreds of Seagulls have been seen on the Surrey Hills, which fact is considered to be a sign of bad weather at sea.

The Starling as a Mimic.

The Starling has been aptly called the English Mocking Bird, but one must be intimately acquainted with the songs of the feathered tribe to be able to dissect the spluttering, gurgling, chattering notes, and whistle of this spangled mimic, to be able to fit them to the music scroll of the more conservative songsters.

Flocks of Chaffinches.

Large flocks of Chaffinches are to be seen in the fields and on the edges of the Surrey woods. These mostly consist of cock birds. One huge flock was carefully examined, as they settled on the open ground, and to all appearances every bird was a male. They well merit the name of the "Bachelor Finch"; anyway, during the winter months.

Nests of the Sparrow Hawks.

These birds are undoubtedly nest builders, for although we sometimes find them utilising the drey of the squirrel or a Crow's nest, it is only as a foundation for its own home. It is always built in a tree, generally in a crotch where two branches meet, or join the trunk. It is a large, flat, straggling affair, composed of sticks and twigs, the finest being in the centre. The same nest is used year after year if left undisturbed.

Birds of the Countryside in Town.

Among the birds seen in the London parks during last summer we noticed the Wheatear, the Fly Catcher, the Willow Wren, the Wagtail, Tits, Swallows, Sand Martins, and Lapwings, besides many commoner birds. This is a proof that birds do not shun the haunts of men, and that grass and trees will always attract them, for it is among these that seeds and insects may be found, and a wild bird's first consideration is naturally his food.

Omnivorous Gulls.

Gulls are among that peculiar class of birds which we term omnivorous; that is, they will eat almost anything. And it is astonishing what large objects they can swallow. When shore shooting is going on they are not slow to look out for wounded birds, and will manage to dispose of anything a bit smaller than themselves, swallowing feathers and bones, first thoroughly wetting the object if rather large to aid the action. The feathers and bones are thrown up in the shape of pellets, after the fleshy portions have been digested. These pellets may be seen upon the cliffs where the birds are in the habit of roosting.

THE LAST WORD

in Roller Canaries is Leipzig. For quality and quantity of song, the Liepzig Rollers stand supreme. No other strain of Rollers sold at far higher prices can come within miles of them. I have an enormous selection of the real Leipzig Rollers in stock, all in perfect health and full song, day and gas light, with long, hollow and double rolls, sweet silvery trills, waterbubble runs, soft roulades, piccolo trills, jug-jug of Nightingale, deep bass rolls, hollow bell rolls, flute notes, etc., etc., and guaranteed to be absolutely free from Titlark or any other objectionable notes whatever, price 6/6, and 7/6 each. Special Bandmasters, which excel in the deep bass and hollow bell rolls, 10/- and 12/6 each. Few guaranteed genuine Seifert contest Rollers, 15/-, 17/6, and 21/- each. These Seifert cocks are real professor birds, with a cascade of overflowing melody, and are fit to win contests immediately. Ordinary loud, free singing Hartz cocks (often sold as Rollers at fancy prices by unscrupulous dealers), in full, loud, vigorous song, day and gas-light, my price 4/6 each, seven for 28/-. Singing box cages, 1/- and 1/6 each; specially made Roller song cabinets, with folding doors, 2/6 each; all are safely and warmly packed in special travelling cages, free of extra cost, and sent on full week's approval, either on receipt of cash or deposit with CAGE BIRDS. I take all risk during the whole time, and unless perfect satisfaction is given and your every expectation realised, every penny of your cash is refunded. See last week's CAGE BIRDS for few testimonials, and below for few more, which have not been used before. "Watling-st., Bridgtown, Staffs. January 3rd. Sir,—The Roller cock gives every satisfaction; please send four hens. Yours, H. Jukes." "27, Union-st., Heywood. January 2. Sir,—I wish you a happy New Year, as I have had one since receving the Roller; it started singing as soon as put into cage, and has been singing all day, and is still at it as I write this. It's the best I ever had. Yours, J. Duckworth." "1, Roches-terrace, Wexford. January 4. Sir,—The Bandmaster at 10/- is the best I ever got. I have paid from 10/- to 21/- to other dealers for Rollers, and this one beats them all. Yours, Michael Crosbie." "Strickland-place, Kendal. January 4. Sir,—Am perfectly satisfied with Roller you sent, it's a gem, a living musical box. Yours, J. Richardson." "156, Bede Burn-rd., Jarrow. January 5. Sir,—Please send Seifert Roller. I got a gem from you in October '07, and what a singer he is, and only paid you 7/6 for him. I have perfect faith in your judgment, and know from experience it will be perfect. Yours, J. Young." "Bolton-st., Bury. January 5. Sir,—I am glad to say I am delighted with Roller you sent me, I never heard a better. Assuring you of future orders. Yours, W. Roberts." "Neath. January 7. Sir,—Roller arrived safe, and I am pleased with it, thanking you for promptness. Yours, W. Worth." "North-rd., Wingate. January 6. Sir,—Received Roller safe, and am very well pleased with it. It is singing splendid. Yours, F. Jackson." "10, Little Windst., Swansea. January 6. Sir,—Hartz cock safely to hand, and am very pleased with him. Please send another. P.O. enclosed. Yours, G. Webber." "Preston, Lancs. December 16. Sir,—Roller arrived in good condition, sung well half-hour after arrival and ever since. He will surprise my friends when they hear him. Yours, J. Nichols." "573, Wakefield-rd., Bradford. December 14. Sir,—Roller arrived in pink of condition. I scarcely know how to thank you for such a good songster. There is no need for depositing when dealing with a straightforward man as you. Yours, F. Stebbings." "19, Clough-rd., Birkby, Huddersfield. December 17. Sir,—Roller gives every satisfaction, it sings from dawn till latest night, its voice is very sweet, and notes quite true. I would not part with it for three or four times price I paid you. Thanking you for honest and straightforward way you have treated me which I cannot say of others. Yours, W. Robinson." "15, Hill-row, Pentwyn, Glam. December, 22. Sir,—My second Bandmaster arrived in pink of condition and sang in less than five minutes after put in cage. Shall certainly recommend you. Yours, W. Gwynne." "45, Patrick-rd., Plaistow. December 27. Sir,—I am very pleased with Roller. It started singing on Thursday, and on Friday it sang so much I had to put it in dark, as I was afraid it would injure itself. It is singing well while I am writing this. Yours, W. Baker." It stands to reason that unless there was something exceptional about my Rollers I should not be continually receiving such shoals of testimonials from delighted customers, only a few of which are published weekly. I am the only importer of this strain of Leipzig Rollers, and no other dealer can get one feather unless he purchases from me. That they are by far the best Rollers on the market I have always asserted, and as a thorough test I ask you to have a Roller from me, and one from elsewhere at any higher price, test them side by side for a week, and keep the one which suits you best. I frequently receive letters from persons who have done this, saying that the Leipzig Roller supplied by me has beaten Rollers obtained elsewhere, which cost three times the money. Remember you have a full week in which to try my birds (although they will sing in few moments after unpacked), and unless you are satisfied in every way, you have the whole of your money refunded. Note name and address of England's largest Roller retailer, and only importer of the Leipzig Roller from "Hans Weber."

All fanciers attending our meetings will be welcomed.—W. REID.

WIMBLEDON C.B.S.

On January 7th, the usual monthly meeting was held at 6, The Broadway, and a large company of members was present, amongst whom were a considerable number of ladies. The great feature of the evening was a splendid exhibition by Mr. F. J. Randall, of Hartz Mountain Canaries, whose soft, sweet, melodious, deep notes charmed and fascinated everyone present. Mr. W. H. Stoakley was in the chair. No fewer than eight new members were elected, and one gentleman was nominated for membership. The secretary, Mr. H. Smith, read correspondence from Mr. Adamthwaithe, secretary of the Federation of London Cage Bird Societies, explaining what alterations had been made in the rules, and expressing the hope that the society would become affiliated. The society unanimously decided to become affiliated. Other letters were read from Mr. Lythgoe, secretary of the Cage Bird Union, informing the society of the annual meeting shortly to be held, and of the proposed alteration of various rules. The delegate of the society, Mr. J. G. Warley, was instructed how to vote with reference to the proposed alteration to rule 17, but was given a free hand with regard to other proposed alterations. Messrs. F. P. Found and S. Wright were elected auditors, and members were requested to send nominations for the committee and officers before the annual meeting on February 1st. The pair show was fixed for February 15th, or as near that date as can be arranged, and it was decided to have three sections, champions, amateurs, and novices; the committee were instructed to select the judge. Mr. Randall then gave his exhibition, after which there was a judging competition of the birds shown by him, be acting as final judge. Some twenty or more members competed, but the great majority were hopelessly out of it, the only competitors to gain points being Messrs. E. W. Dell and A. Hare 3 each, and Miss Peachey and Mr. H. Brooke 1 each. A hearty vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Randall for his excellent exhibition. In responding, Mr. Randall, who is a member of the society, said that two of the birds had been winners of the champion cup for Rollers, and that other birds had taken first and second prizes in champion classes.

Letters were read from Mr. J. Pooley resigning membership; secretary, Toronto C.B.S., thanking the association for gift of medal; and others. The result of the ballot for officers was as follows:—Council: A. W. Curtis, 58 votes; W. Shepherd, 50; H. Davies, 47; W. Prance, 45; A. W. Hart and F. Wyse, 44; J. Burton, 41; F. Curry, 40; G. Robson, 43 votes. 107 papers sent out, 71 returned. The annual show balance sheet, duly audited, showing income £43 17s. 10d., expenditure £48 11s. 3d., and a loss of £4 13s. 5d., was confirmed, also the annual balance sheet showing income £131 10s. 8d., expenditure £108 6s. 10d., with a cash balance of £23 3s. 10d. and assets £48 18s. 6d. Both auditors being present, complimented the association upon its sound financial position, having no fictitious assets, as they had again written off 25 per cent., in accordance with their principle. A vote of thanks was accorded the auditors. Arising out of the renewal of the subscription to the C.B.U., a long discussion took place, resolving itself into a proposition that we discontinue our connection with the C.B.U. Upon a vote being taken, the same was carried with one dissentient. Result of the Crest and Crest-bred competition: Champion, J. Buckman, 28 points; Amateur, G. Menhenett, 29; Novice, W. Large, 31 points. Silver medals were presented to the same. Mr. C. Prior was elected unopposed to judge the Finch show, March 13. Upon a vote being taken (with Messrs. Adamthwaite and Offord as scrutineers), Messrs. J. Robson and C. A. House for the Young Bird Show; R. L. Crisp, J. Robson, C. Prior, and H. Norman for the Annual Show, were elected as judges, to be submitted to a final vote by the whole of the members. A vote of thanks to retiring officers was accorded with acclammation. The secretary read a letter from Mr. R. J. Pretty drawing attention to the distressing condition of one of the members, and appealing for assistance on his behalf; after an eloquent address upon the existing conditions of the country and trade by the chairman (Mr. A. C. Burn) a collection realised £1 for the said member. Time not permitting the discussion of the alteration of rules, the meeting was adjourned.—V. WYNN, Hon. Sec.

Robin's Secret.

I'm little Robin Redbreast, Miss,
My nest is in the tree;
If you look up in yonder elm,
My pleasant home you'll see.
We made it very soft and nice—
My pretty mate and I—
And all the time we worked at it
We sang most merrily.

I have a secret I would like
The little girls to know;
But I won't tell a single boy—
They rob the poor birds so.
Within our pretty little nest,
Arranged with loving care,
Are five sweet speckled little eggs;—
Don't tell the boys they're there!

*A Homing Twite.

While I was out catching birds recently with my father, and when fully a mile from home, father's Twite call-bird got away, and to our surprise, when we got home, we found the Twite had got there before us, and had gone into a Siskin trap in the garden. This Twite has only one leg, so there could be no mistake; it was our call-bird that had flown home.—Sent by Findlay McGillivray (age 11), St. David's Place, Grangepans, Bo'ness.

*A True Chaffinch Story.

A Chaffinch I once had was a very good call-bird, so I used to hang it on the wall in the garden and watch the other birds come on to the cage. One day, when I came home from school, the bird was gone; I had not properly fastened the door, and in trying to reach the other birds it had got out of the cage. We were all very sorry, for we were very fond of it. Three days afterwards as we sat at dinner we heard something chirping "Pink! Pink! Pink!" My sister said the pretty pink had come back. Then we went to the door and found it was so. We reached its empty cage down, sprinkled a little seed in it, and it went in while we stood there.—Sent by J. Brown (age 12), 28, Logan Street, Market Harborough.

Mr. WM. ELLIS (Ipswich).

It is with the deepest regret, writes Mr. Wm. Barritt, hon. secretary of the Suffolk C.B.S., that I have to announce the death of one of our oldest members, Mr. William Ellis, 25, Alan Road, Ipswich. He passed away on January 13th, after a protracted illness, aged 60 years. He was a true fancier (in every sense of the word), and an ardent admirer of both the Norwich Plainhead, and the Crested Canary, which he bred for upwards of 30 years. The deepest sympathy of all who knew him, will go out to his widow and family.

Mr. ROBERT SINCLAIR.

The many friends of Mr. Robert Sinclair, writes Mr. A. Ackroyd (Oldham), locally known as "Black Bob," will be sorry to hear of his sudden demise, at about two o'clock on Tuesday afternoon, January 12th. Mr. Sinclair had been ailing on and off for about two years from a complication of diseases, chiefly heart trouble. He followed the occupation of engineer. Mr. Sinclair had been in the Fancy for about 20 years, and his chief varieties were the Lancashire and Norwich. He had attained the age of 55 years.

Mr. F. HOWES (Wolverhampton).

It is with the deepest regret, writes Mr. J. A. Tonks, vice-chairman of the Wolverhampton C.B.S., that I have to inform you of the death of Mr. F. Howes, our genial and worthy secretary, of Leslie Road, Wolverhampton. He took to his bed on January 8th, with pneumonia, and passed away on the Thursday following, the illness, therefore, lasting only about six days. Mr. Howes had been secretary of the Wolverhampton C.B.S. since its inauguration. He was always thorough and hard working in regard to all which he put his hand to, and a gentleman, too, as the success of our late show proved; and it is gratifying to know that the club is on a good footing. Mr. Howes was a keen and enthusiastic fancier of the Yorkshire Canary, of which he always had a splendid stock, winning numerous prizes up and down the country. I am sure all fanciers will join me in conveying our deepest sympathy and condolence to his wife and children in their great bereavement. Mr. Howes was interred on January 18th at the Heath Town Cemetery, and a beautiful wreath was forwarded by the members of the society.

The Jubilee Palace Show.

In reply to several inquiries we may say that the show will be open until 10 p.m. each evening, except on the closing day (Tuesday), when the curtain will be rung down, so to speak, at 4 p.m.

Mr. Ramsden informs us that the secretary of the Lancashire Canary Association has written asking him to make it clear that specials 132-137 are to be competed for by their members for most points with 4 nominated birds; also that the said medals have been competed for at 4 previous shows, that the Palace is the last one on the list, and that afterwards the medals are awarded after all points have been counted for the five shows.

INTENDING EXHIBITORS should remember that the last day for making entries is this Saturday (January 23rd), and post early to make certain of being in time, as the management clearly states that there will be no extension of time. There should be a record entry in view of the record prize money and other attractions, and if any readers wish to enter birds, but have not received schedules, they should refer to the review of the schedule given on page 34 last week; or describe their birds to the Manager, who will see them entered in the proper classes. We gave the total number of classes as 146, but this should have been 148, as two "A" number classes for Lancashires (Novices) were overlooked.

TELEGRAMS OR LETTERS asking for result of judging cannot be answered by the show authorities. Under these circumstances CAGE BIRDS will be pleased to supply exhibitors with the result in any class upon compliance with the following rules:—

1. Fully-stamped postcards, letters, or telegraph forms must reach us, at 154, Fleet-street, not later than February 4th.

3. All applicants for results at the Palace must write RESULT on top left-hand corner of the envelope.

CAGE BIRDS will have its usual stall at the Palace, and we shall be pleased to welcome visitors, to greet old friends, and to make new friends. Our "Visitors' Book" will be in its usual place on the stall, and we trust everyone present will make a point of leaving their signatures there-in.

Chapter xxv.—My Virginian Cardinals.

Crabbe Robinson says somewhere: "I now perceive why old men repeat their stories in company. When they originate nothing they can profit their juniors by recollections of the past." I propose to use the old-man privilege and tell you a very old experience, and yet one that at the time was to me, at any rate, very full of interest.

In the Market.

Virginian Cardinals are probably familiar to almost all the readers of CAGE BIRDS. At any rate, they were a few years ago, but for the last few seasons they have been rather scarce, owing to the fact that Americans have forbidden the exportation of these native birds so that those that now come over are brought here by private enterprise, and fetch correspondingly long prices.

At the time I am writing about, Virginian Cardinals were one of the commonest of annual importations across the pond, and could be bought readily for 15s. the pair. Now I see single specimens advertised at 30s. and 40s. each. In almost every bird-shop at a certain season you might have seen one or two unhappy cocks of this species, looking extremely sick and sorry for themselves.

In buying Virginian Cardinals let me give a word of warning. Buy them as soon after they arrive as possible, for a very short sojourn in a dirty cage will prove fatal, for there the seeds of consumption will be laid, which will sooner or later end the career of your purchase.

Hardy; but Delicate at First.

When once acclimatised, Virginians are hardy enough, and will stand all weathers with perfect impunity, except fog, but I always found newly-come-over specimens exceedingly delicate; indeed, I should be ashamed to say how many I have lost in acclimatising my present pair. But there, it doesn't do to speak of losses. This is a truthful narrative, and so I put down things just as they happened. Friends, as Professor Jowett said, always think it necessary (except Boswell, that great genius) to tell lies about their deceased friends; they leave out all their faults, lest the public should exaggerate them. But we want to know their faults; that is probably the most interesting part of them!

So I am going to tell you the worst about my scarlet friends. They are rather delicate, at any rate, at first. When once acclimatised, it is different.

I see people often complain that they cannot keep their Cardinals in colour. I fancy the reason is wrong feeding! Hemp is usually recommended, and this, if used freely, I take it, will turn any bird black. I know it will Bullfinches. A "black" Bullfinch is simply a bird saturated with hemp seed. My Cardinals never get any hemp. They have Canary, millet, and live food ad libitum; my bird's coat is as glorious in colour as when he sang in the valleys of his native Pennsylvania.

When they first come over, Virginians are usually badly knocked about, and deficient in wings and tail, especially tail. I always pull out all the broken stumps (not all at one time, but little by little), and cage the birds until the new feathers are grown. This takes about six weeks.

A Word of Advice.

My birds are out of doors all the year round in a big garden aviary among all sorts and conditions of birds, and though there are nests all around them, the Cardinals maintain the path of virtue; in fact, they are the most inoffensive birds I know. Unless you are fairly well off, you will not put newly imported Virginians out till May is well over. It is a beastly treacherous month, although Chaucer called it "swete" May. I fancy he would call it something else if he lived to-day.

If you disregard my advice, you will have some costly burials, which perhaps you are fond of. Mr. Hare relates that in the Duke of Hamilton's Park is a large domed edifice, something like the tomb of Theodoric at Ravenna. It was erected by the last duke for himself, his son, grandson, and his nine predecessors. "What a grand sight it will be," he said, "when twelve dukes of Hamilton rise together at the Resurrection." Perhaps you may be of a like opinion with regard to Virginian Cardinals. If so, follow his lead and prepare your sepulchre. It will soon be tenanted, I can assure you.

A Severe Check.

Last year I came pretty near to success in breeding, but just as the nest was finished, the hen got a tumour on her breast and I had to kill her. Still, I was not discouraged. I remembered that Jowett, speaking to a young fellow who, through bad health and defective eyesight, had failed in getting a first in Mods. said, "A man of your ability must succeed in life, but you must not be disappointed if circumstances make you fail in any particular instance." This, I felt, exactly described my case. I was lucky enough shortly to find another hen, and I felt like the widower who inscribed on his wife's tombstone: "The light of my life has gone out," and excused himself to her successor by adding, "but I have struck another."

Ill Luck.

But when I got this (second) hen the season for nesting had gone by. This year the Cardinals began pretty early with nesting operations. The cock came into song about March, and soon after the hen began to carry about sticks and straws, but seemed unable to find a place to her mind, and went and laid three eggs on the bare ground. These were very small for the size of the bird, and exactly like the egg of the common House Sparrow, and not much larger. I was rather sickened by this, and thought I was in for another spell of ill luck. The more so, as having the choice of two nests in the garden to put them in—a Chaffinch's and a Robin's—I selected the Robin's, as I thought it most hidden, and, of course, I chose the wrong one, for the next day some young calves in the field got nosing about and put their silly heads into the nest (it was in a hole in a stump), and smashed the eggs.

That was failure No. 1. About ten days later, the hen laid two more eggs, and again on the bare ground; and as I could not find a nest to put them in, I gave them to one of my children.—Failure No. 2.

Success in Sight.

About a fortnight after this I happened to go into the aviary and, quite by chance, found the hen Virginian had built a nest in a bush, neatly lined with dry roots, and had laid two eggs. I looked next day and still only two eggs (much to my joy), as I knew that two youngsters would take me plenty of rearing; and the hen sitting steadily. A curious thing happened now, for, whereas until this the hen had been most "scary," she now would let me go quite close to her without coming off.

The cock now began to sing most magnificently, especially in the evening, but he took no part at all in incubation (although we are told that the cock always sits on the nest when the hen leaves it). If he ever does sit on the edge, it is to get at the eggs more easily to eat them!

Before the sitting commenced he was most attentive in feeding the hen, and all through the time of incubation he fed his wife assiduously. They feed from the crop.

The Young Ones' Arrival.

All went well, and on the thirteenth day, on looking into the nest as I passed, I found that both eggs had hatched. The young were queer looking little beggars, covered all over with very dark fluff, like young Bullfinches. I watched the process of feeding with great interest, but, like the sister of Moses, "from a distance." The modus operandi was as follows:—The cock arrived at the nest side at stated intervals and fed the hen from the crop; she then gently raised herself in the nest and fed the young.

For a week, I think, she hardly ever left the nest. All feeding was done by the cock. I gave them peas, strawberries, cherries, maggots, and mealworms, in addition to seed. At the end of a week the young had grown enormously, and were a sort of brownish colour. On the eighth day they opened their eyes on this wicked world; on the tenth they were well feathered, colour a sort of snuff brown; and on July 18th, to my intense astonishment, they left the nest—I can't say they flew; rather, they had hopped out.

I found them quite happy on the floor, in the midst of an admiring throng of Pekin Robins and their own proud and happy parents. They are queer little mortals with small crests, no tails, and enormous legs and feet—"Like your's father," as one of my children said.

The most wonderful part of the whole proceeding, to my mind, is this: that these birds have been reared in an aviary in which I have, besides the parents, two pairs of Pekin Robins and a pair of Shamas. It only shows what can be done. The other thing I have noticed, my Virginians hardly ever erect their crests, whereas in a cage they are always on end. I ought also to say that for five days I was ill in bed, after the hatching, and the birds were looked after by my wife; so that to her is due the credit of this success.

I have been taken to task over what I wrote about Pekin Robins, because I ventured to run counter to "the authorities." Nevertheless, I must do so once again. Mr. Gedney says that the four eggs are laid at intervals during eight days. All I can say is, mine laid every day, like a well-regulated bird. The cock, again, is stated to have settled down upon the eggs in the hen's absence. Mine was not so incautious. The young are hatched quite naked, says Mr. Gedney. Mine were covered over with dark fluff.

The young, says Mr. Gedney, fledge rapidly and leave the nest at the end of five weeks. I can only say, with Dominie Sampson, Prodigious! mine must have been very previous, as they left it at the end of ten days. Judging from internal evidence, I should doubt Mr. Gedney's account of the nesting of Virginian Cardinals.

In making this statement, I shelter myself under the authority of Goethe, who remarks on such grand old tales as those of Horatius and Scœvola, that if the Romans were great enough to invent these stories, we ought to be great enough to believe them.

But I would warn anyone who thinks of trying to rear Virginian Cardinals that it is no light and easy task. It means hours and hours of most constant care and watchfulness. One little bit of forgetfulness will spoil everything, and so remember the old saw:—

Qui vult optatam cursu contingere metam,
Multa tulit facitque puer.

Mating & Feeding the Cinnamon Canary.

By W. A. BLADON.

A paper read before the members of the City and Suburban A.C.

Having promised to send you a paper on the Cinnamon Canary, I must try and fulfil that promise, although it is impossible to help treading on ground that has not already been well beaten. You can scarcely pick up one of the Fancy papers without coming across something of all varieties of Canaries, the Cinnamon amongst them, so I find it very difficult to say something that has not been already said that would be at all interesting or attractive.

The Cinnamon has very rightly been described as a beautiful and attractive variety, which I fully endorse, as given a good specimen, either Buff or Yellow, he is a handsome fellow when in condition and at his best, which I consider to be at his first full moult. But although I think he is at his best at that time, still, a good healthy bird will maintain his show form for five or six years if well taken care of.

A Good Specimen.

The following is what I should consider a good specimen. He should be perfectly level in colour all over his body, well poised, and looking altogether as if he meant to be admired; the skull should be fairly wide (a not very easy point to accomplish without endangering his otherwise good looks), as his tendency is to run comparatively narrow there rather than otherwise, especially the Yellows, and if you try to avoid this by crossing, the danger is that he becomes browed, which is a disfigurement to a Cinnamon, and very difficult to breed out again, as it will make its appearance many generations afterwards, even on a narrow skull. As he is essentially a bird of colour (without which property, and plenty of it, he is no use on the show bench), the motto to be inscribed on his banner should therefore be "colour, size, and quality." The present standard gives 50 points for colour, and although a good Cinnamon colour, i.e., depth and purity, should be well maintained, I think it would not hurt to lower it by five points and add them to the points for quality and compactness of body feather, because, notwithstanding that a great advance has of late been made in quality, a good deal still remains to be done; and, further, I think that many good birds are prevented from appearing on the show bench on account of their owners not having either the skill, or knowledge to feed up to the required standard.

Plenty of Hot Pepper.

I do not think the required depth of colour can be got without the use of a very considerable amount of hot pepper. I know a good many fanciers who feed on what is known as cold pepper alone, considering it cruelty to compel birds to eat the hot; but I remember the time when there was no cold, it was all hot, and no ill effects seemed to follow its use, and however much anyone may dislike to use hot pepper, I do not think, as I say above, that the required depth of colour can be got without it, at least, for Cinnamons, whatever it may do for other varieties. I do not think it necessary that a bird should eat a big lot of colour food, providing it is of the right quality; and great care is required in the selection. There are some good samples of peppers on the market, and the best should be obtained. Having obtained it, perhaps it may be necessary to compel the birds to eat it, by removing the seed; and, indeed, I don't think good results will be got without removing it. Of course, care must be taken that the birds do not suffer in consequence; a good plan is to replace the seed hopper in the afternoon or evening, so that they may have a feed before roosting time. The Cinnamon is not more difficult to deal with than any other variety, either in his food or moult, all varieties requiring very great care and attention during this period.

In breeding strictest attention should be paid to the size and quality of the birds; small birds are of no use whatever on the show bench, therefore it is necessary, in order to be at all successful, to obtain birds of some size, especially on the cock's side, and he should answer the description I have indicated above, whether yellow or buff. For some reason or other that I am not acquainted with, the buffs run somewhat larger than the yellows, and as far as my experience goes, I have nearly always had the best results from pairing with a buff cock. The hen should also be of good size and quality of feather, have a nice neat head (but not a narrow one) something like what one sees on a good Norwich. I don't care for hens over big, but just a medium size; there is generally something wrong with a very big hen, she is too lazy to either build or feed, in fact, does not care about maternal duties at all.

I like a hen Cinnamon to be very sprightly and active, even if she runs a little less in size. Hens of this description nearly always turn out to be the best feeders, which makes all the difference between a good and a poor specimen. In my estimation, birds are made in the nest, and although you may have the best of birds, still, if the young do not get well nurtured and fed from the day they are hatched, they never grow up to be fine ones.

How to Get Large Cinnamons.

In order to get large Cinnamons, it was once necessary to cross with other varieties, notably the Crest-bred and Lancashire; and for those who are ambitious, and have a desire to manufacture their own instead of having them ready-made, I still think this is the way to do it. Should anyone be found with the necessary patience and perseverance, the birds obtained for this purpose must be hens, and the cocks must be Cinnamons, because (to make a statement that has been made over and over again) the Cinnamon can be grafted on to any variety, but no variety can be grafted on the Cinnamon; a great deal of care and judgment is required in selecting the hens; they should not be rough or heavy browed birds, but as short and compact in feather as it is possible to get. But, having said this much, I also feel constrained to say that the size of the Cinnamon is now so well established, that it would be sheer waste of time, i.e., of course, to breed self Cinnamons; if the desire is to breed for marks or ticks, that is another matter. For that purpose they are either crossed with the Norwich or Yorkshire, which, being birds of fine feather, nothing of type or quality is lost, and a Cinnamon tick, or marked bird, is extremely handsome; the beauty of the bird cannot be surpassed by that of any other variety.

Which is the Correct Type?

With regard to the type of Cinnamon, my verdict is for the Norwich type. I have been asked more than once: What does it matter about type, so long as you get a good big bird? According to my view of the fitness and beauty of things, it matters a good deal; a bird of no type does not commend itself to me, however big and good it may be; there is nothing to compare it with; it is neither a Norwich, Yorkshire, Lancashire, nor anything else. No; in my estimation the Norwich type fits the Cinnamon best; a bird like the best of the Norwich we see to-day, with the same quality of feather, etc. (only perhaps a little larger), is a bird that would want some beating.

The Effects of Cinnamon Crossing.

Referring to Cinnamon crossing, I am almost tempted to leave this part of the subject alone, but really such wonderful and mysterious results occur that I feel I must say a few words about it. What I have said above about crossing with the Crest-bred or Lancashire, had reference to building up a strain of one's own, but apart from that, the results of various crossings are very interesting, and I venture to think such results cannot be obtained from any other variety.

Some years ago I did a good deal of crossing, for curiosity's sake, resulting in birds of all degrees of variegation, both Greens and Cinnamons, and I once bred a most beautiful bronze, which came through the mating of a buff Cinnamon cock, to a yellow Lancashire hen; a fine big bird it was, but I unfortunately lost it during its first moult, so I had no opportunity of seeing what would have resulted from the pairing of that again (it was a cock bird), and I feel certain, if I could have paired him back to the Cinnamon, I should have obtained some beauties; I have never been fortunate enough to breed another bird like him.

Now, in order to get the best satisfaction out of these various crossings, considerable attention will have to be paid to pedigree, as it is impossible to obtain desired results without knowing the material with which you are working; for instance, if you wanted to breed Cinnamons from a Green cock, it follows you must have bred the Green cock before you could tell what it would produce, and it must have a certain amount of Cinnamon blood, say, 75 per cent., which you can only be certain about by breeding it yourself; it follows, therefore, that the Green has been bred from the Cinnamon, and it must be done by pairing with a Cinnamon cock, as crossing Cinnamon hens with other varieties will never produce any Cinnamons; this may seem curious, but a good many curious things happen in Cinnamon crossing, which I think makes the Cinnamon variety all the more fascinating and attractive.

I hope the foregoing will be interesting to your members, and be the means of enlisting some recruits in the Cinnamon Fancy, as I feel convinced that once one takes up this interesting variety, they would be amply repaid for any trouble or disappointment they might meet with by the very interesting results to be obtained.

The Discussion.

At the close Messrs. G. Crabb and J. W. Ramsden, by special request, in the absence of Mr. Bladon (both being old Cinnamon breeders), answered questions as follows:—They would not recommend a Cinnamon for fining down Norwich Plainheads, but a Yellow Green. The use of a Green to reduce the body feather of Cinnamons was inadvisable, as it would produce smoky backs and obliterate considerably the pencilling so much admired, but it would be preferable to cross with the Yellow Lancashire and then recross to the Cinnamon. Both gentlemen bore out Mr. Bladon's statement as to the importance of the skull of the Cinnamon. Mr. Ramsden gave an account of a Cinnamon with a small skull which he had once sold to Messrs. Laskey and Crabb; how the progeny came with the same defect; and how he eventually bought it back and afterwards paired it to three different hens with satisfactory results as to skull properties.

Messrs. Crabb and Ramsden dissented from Mr Bladon as to colour feeding with hot pepper, as from long years of experience they had both produced birds fed on sweet pepper equal to the hottest bird exhibited. In their opinion hot pepper was harmful to birds. They were opposed to taking off the seed-boxes. Mr. Ramsden told how a Cinnamon almost pined away because the colour food was discontinued, the bird refusing to eat seed. The reason why Cinnamons were inclined to be delicate was that there was such extensive inbreeding being carried on, almost the whole of the Cinnamons emanating from three bird-rooms.

Mr. Crabb said he had made a special study of them at the last Palace show, and he could scarcely detect any Lancashire crossing. He then explained the possibilities of Mule breeding from the Cinnamon cross, giving the mode of producing the ideal bird for that purpose; and followed this by a survey of the Cinnamon from the days when Jacob Mackley exhibited with marked success at the Palace fifteen years ago a Cinnamon Crest-bred, tracing the changes in the standard of type, down to the present day. Mr. Crabb also made reference to a statement by Mr. North at a meeting at the L. and P. and O.S., that with 64 per cent. of Cinnamon blood it was possible to breed self Cinnamons.

Mr. Ramsden appealed to the members to take up this interesting variety, crowded as it was with many surprises.

The chairman proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Bladon for his excellent paper, coupling with it the names of Messrs. G. Crabb and J. W. Ramsden. This was seconded by A. S. Wheller, supported by F. Lathlieff, and carried.—V. WYNN, hon. secretary.

By C. A. House.

This is a thorough and practical guide to the general management and breeding of Canaries, written by a well-known expert and judge. It contains chapters dealing fully with the breeding, etc., of every member of the Canary family, and an illustration of each bird, by the master Canary artist, Mr. H. Norman, reproduced in the finest art style. There are also exhaustive chapters on aviaries and cages, breeding procedure, moulting, exhibiting, diseases, and seeds—a compendium of knowledge approached by no other book of its kind at the price.

CAGE BIRDS, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

SOME BRITISH BIRDS I HAVE KEPT.

By J. W. FISHER.

A Word for "Bobbie."

I very much like the Robins. They are the easiest of all our native birds to tame. Generally speaking, in a few days after they are caught, if you have a plentiful supply of mealworms, you can get them to take them from your fingers.

Some birds, such as the Wheatear, for instance, will sit and sulk and even die, with food all round them and mealworms crawling over them; but not so Mr. Bobbie. If there is anything in the food line lying about in his cage, although he will perhaps look at you with those large eyes of his while you are in the room (I mean when he is first caught), just go out, and if you have a peep-hole where you can observe him, you will find he will have a try at it, and if it is anything like suitable for his lordship he will soon be quite at home.

I think them very nice pets, and one can teach them almost anything. Their song is one that I like to hear, as they sing just the last thing at night after the other birds have given up the job.

But Robins sing during the day as well, and many a one have I exhibited. One of mine was claimed at a Palace show for a guinea. I had one in a local show where it got third prize. An old Canary fancier and I were standing close by, and Mr. Robin was piping it out then. The old gent looked at him and said: "Aye, that's a Robin; I never saw one in a show before." Pulling out his spectacles he began to look in his catalogue to see whose bird it was, when I told him it was mine. "How long have you had that?" he asked. After telling him the number of months, he said: "Then you have got him nicely on to seed." "Robins do not eat seed," I said, and the old man almost collapsed.

How to Exhibit Soft Bills.

Now I will try and give some idea of what is required to show birds of this kind; but my remarks are, in my opinion, applicable to other kinds of cage birds.

To keep them in health and in good plumage, you require always nice, roomy cages and baths that can be hung on to the outsides of the cages, so that the birds may have a good bathe as often as is convenient (and they must be large enough for the birds to get into without breaking their tail feathers).

But to show a bird to advantage and with some chance of success, you want to study the size as well as the shape of the cage, and, above everything else, you want to get at the right colour, or even shade, to show up your birds to the best advantage. For instance, a Blackbird looks very well in a cage painted white, but how much better he shows up in one painted pale or sky blue, while any of the Thrush family looks well in a cage of a certain green shade. I wonder how many fanciers have spent more time than three whom I can remember. About fifteen or sixteen years ago they and I used to meet first at one house and then at another, and sit into "the wee small hours anant the twal," as Burns put it, discussing this very question. Night after night would we thrash it out, to the annoyance of what are usually called our better halves. In conclusion, my advice to young fanciers is: Do not be afraid of exhibiting your British birds.

LARKHALL N.B.

Larkhall (N.B.) O.S. held their annual show in the Public Hall on Jan. 16. The president of committee is Mr. W. Hamilton, and the committee consists of Messrs. J. Anderson, W. Hamilton, W. McEwan, J. Graham, J. Morton, J. W. Clelland, A. Kerr, W. Lambie, T. Welsh, A. Strang, J. Newlands, J. Stoke, and A. Golder, a body of men second to none. There were 13 classes in the cage bird section, which was judged by Mr. Allan Chalmers (Kirkintilloch). The entries here numbered the same as last year, some of the most noted winners of the season being staged. The hall is a very suitable one in every way—only a little more room was wanted. Every inch of space was used to the best advantage. Secretaries Messrs. James and Thomas McEwan and Treasurer James Kerr, together with President Hamilton, are gentlemen fanciers in the true sense of the term; they are all proud of their hobby, and are courteous and obliging. The exhibits were nicely staged, and every detail was carefully carried out to make the show the success it proved, for which Mr. Jas. McEwan and his able band of workers deserve every praise. The hall was crowded with visitors, including some of the most noted fanciers of the day.

CHESTER AND DISTRICT C.B.S

Annual members' show held on Boxing Day in the Corn Exchange, Eastgate Street. Entries were good. The room was very comfortable, and the staging was all that could be desired. The secretary, Mr. Swindley, had everything in apple-pie order, ably assisted by several of the members. Mr. J. Burns (Birkenhead) officiated as judge. Messrs. Jones and Chester put down a fine team, securing special for best Norwich, also special for best Yorkshire. The novice special was won by Mr. W. R. Morris with a very neat yellow Yorkshire, shown in faultless condition. In the British section Messrs. Angus and Crane staged some grand specimens, their Redwing taking special for best British.

BANBRIDGE.

Annual show held in the Town Hall on Jan. 8 and 9. The hall is exceedingly well adapted for a show of this kind, being large, well lighted, and free from draught. Mr. W. A. Cowgill (Bradford) officiated as judge. Mr. R. J. Hamilton made an ideal secretary, and was well supported by his colleagues, everything being done for the comfort of the exhibits in their charge. The entries did not come quite up to expectations, but the quality of the exhibits throughout was good, Mr. J. Lavery's foul yell. Scotch Fancy winning the cup for best in show. The Crests were moderately good. The Norwich, though not numerous, were a nice lot. The Yorkshire section, too, contained many real "good 'uns," Mr. J. Devins being runner-up here for best in show. The British bird and Mule classes contained some really good topping exhibits, Mr. J. Lavery winning cup for best British with a lovely Goldfinch. Mr. J. Nelson was runner-up with another good Goldie.

FRASERBURGH.

Annual open show of the Fraserburgh C.B.S. was held on Jan. 13 in the Dalrymple Hall, a splendid place for such an exhibition, being high and well lighted from both sides. Entries came up very well, over 200 birds being nicely staged and well looked after by a hard-working body of fanciers. We were sorry to be informed that five pairs of foreign birds, belonging to Mr. J. Whyte (Woodside) arrived dead at the show. Norwich were a grand lot, as also the class of 17 Yorkshires. The foreign birds were a marvellous collection. Mr. A. G. Gavin turned out no less than 20 birds all in perfect health and plumage. Mr. Grant makes a dip-top secretary, and had everything in A1 order. Mr. James Sandison made the awards, which gave every satisfaction.

BATH AND DISTRICT F.A.

Members' show held Jan. 7th in the Corn Market, Walcot Street. The cage birds were staged at the far end of the hall, facing the many windows, and Old Sol being on his best behaviour nothing was left to be desired in the way of plenty of good light. Though in numbers our section was not so great as has been the case on many previous occasions, there were amongst the 53 exhibits many grand birds which have won in the keenest competition at several leading open shows. Mr. E. Allsopp (Swindon) placed the cards.

NOR. YELL. CK.: 1, spl for best Plainhead, 4, hc, Tristam and Taylor, winner well-known cl. yell., rare colour, type and quality, has been given a deserved rest of late and looking the better for it; 2, Folwell, unflig. cl., again well known, just a few feathers gone from neck, which told against him; 3, vhc, Brown, former thigh ticked, good one; c, Newman. BUFF: 1, spl for 2nd best Plainhead, Brown, well-known "Cherry Blossom," in full bloom, what more need we say? 2, Folwell, grand cl., good head and neck, well filled in back; 3, 4, Tristam and Taylor, another good cl., rare colour and quality. YORKS. YELL.: 1, 2, Cooper, winner wing ticked, nice typical one, good length, straight as a rush, well bracced wings, pair of good legs, 2nd not so neat as winner, but a nice one. NOR. OR YORKS. HEN: 1, Brown, cl. yell., neat and natty, not the largest certainly, but one of those you stick to; 2, Folwell, wing ticked buff, good type and quality, well up for size; 3, Tristam and Taylor, varieg., good type, quality and colour. A.O.V.: 1, 2, 3, Roberts, winner good Crest in every respect, 2nd another nice Crest, 3rd Crest-bred. GOLDFINCH: 1, spl, 2, S. E. Jones, not much to separate these two, leader has a slight pull in size; 3, S. Jones, again good one, equal in blaze as regards shape and colour, but unfortunately he has two or three white feathers at base of beak, which told against him; 4, F. Mead; vhc, Fishlock; hc, Chivers. BULLFINCH: 1, Russell, beautiful dense clean cut cap, best breast colour in class, put down in rare order; 2, 3, S. E. Jones, later in the afternoon could well have changed places with the 2nd, but showed a nasty twist in throat earlier in the day; 4, Jones; vhc, Mead. LINNET OR TWITE: 1, Russell, very nice Twite, beautifully laced, very steady, in A1 order; 2, 3, Hussey, two nice Linnets, everything there in colour and markings. SISKIN OR REDPOLL: 1, spl, and cup for best cage-moulted Hardbill, Russell, well-known champion Siskin, everything that goes to make up an ideal Siskin was to be found in this one, in rare condition, shown as he well deserves; 2, Gibbons, neat Redpoll; 3, Russell, another good Redpoll; 4, Chivers. MULE OR HYB.: 1, S. Jones, rare coloured Greenie-Can., good one; 2, 3, Weeks, Greenie-Bullie and varieg. Goldie-Can., both well shown; 4, Mead, Siskin-Can., nice dark Mule. BRIT. A.O.S.: 1, S. Jones, well-known, well shown Hawfinch, called "Bath Bob," has rendered good service to his cheery owner, having won now close on £10, we fancy we have seen him looking a wee bit keener than to-day, however he gave the judge a rare tussle for cup which he won last year; 2, 3, S. E. Jones, clinking Greenfinch, wonderful size and colour, and a grand Starling, best we have ever seen; 4, Gibbons; vhc, Swift; hc, Coates; c, Hussey. FOR.: 1, 2, 3, Capt. Perreau, pair of Pileated Parrakeets, a pair of Saffron Finches, and a pair of Pileated Finches, all shown in grand style; 4, Fishlock, Ringneck Parrakeet.

There were 170 entries in 22 classes, averaging over eight per class. The secretary is Mr. John Dixon, and his assistant Mr. W. Wollett. ## PRESCOT.

The 22nd open show was held in the well-known and capitally lighted Assembly Room, Derby Street, on Jan. 15 and 16. Those very old-time fanciers and strong exhibitors, Messrs. J. Lucas, Scarisbrick Taylor, W. Wedgwood, A. Wellings, and G. Atkinson lent their influence and aid both on the official staff and in the exhibiting arena, and were well seconded and supported by Messrs. F. Smith, J. Platt, R. P. and J. B. S. Chesworth, with Mr. N. Lucas as hon. treasurer. Mr. Jno. Platt, the hon. secretary, had the arrangements well in hand, and was courteous to all. A very modest schedule of 23 classes was compiled. Four money prizes per class and a good list of specials were supplied, both in the open and for members. A £5 limit was put on all birds, but there was a very nice show of 150 birds, most of these being of a very good order. Mr. Chas. Houlton judged, and his awards were very well received. These ardent fanciers hope to extend the classification another year, when they trust exhibitors will rally round them.

WATERLOO (Liverpool).

The Waterloo Progressive C.B.S. held the members' old bird show in the Oxford Hall, Waterloo, on Jan. 9. There were 130 classes fixed, most of these being for Yorkshires and Yorkshire Greens, 68 for the former and 27 for the latter. The 22 Norwich and Norwich Green classes had to be cancelled. There were 2 Mule and 7 British classes. As this is practically a new society, with about 33 members, it was hardly to be expected that so many classes would receive entries. A large number had to be struck out and others amalgamated or condensed so as to create competition. Just over 150 birds were shown, and these made a very creditable display. In some of the classes competition ran very high, and the special prizes were keenly fought for. Mr. Chas. Houlton judged, and his awards were well received. Mr. J. Hunt is a capable secretary and a valuable servant and official. If a curtailed classification is fixed, there will then still be abundance of classes for all members' birds.

MARSKE-BY-THE-SEA.

Marske and Dis. F.C. held their 2nd annual open show on Jan. 16 in the Institute. The "gate" was very good, the entries also coming up well. The amount of entry fees was above what was wanted to pay prize money, and the committee intend extending the classification next year. Mr. T. Kirby, the energetic secretary, had everything well in hand, and was ably assisted by a hard-working and capable committee, who gave every attention to the needs of the exhibits, which were staged in a separate room. The room was a very suitable one, having plenty of light. The exhibits were of a high-class order, both the Canaries and the British. Mr. S. Ware won the special for best bird in show, and Mr. J. Meaburn took that for best member's bird. Mr. A. Wake (Middlesbrough) judged, his awards giving satisfaction.

In the advertisement of the Cardigan Show, which appeared in our columns last week, the date of that show was inadvertently given by our printers as February 5th instead of Wednesday, February 3rd. Will fanciers please note this correction? The society is hoping for a bumping entry, and the management is in capable hands.

I have never been so surprised as I was on Saturday. I had four replies to my advertisement on the Saturday, and that was before I had seen the advertisement myself. I had one reply each from Southampton and Surrey and 2 from London, so I think that is quite sufficient to show what Cage Birds is for advertising in.—A. Bennett (Carlton).

I note there is no account of the specials won in the Lizard classes in Mr. Winter's (the secretary's) report of the Scottish National Show, writes Mr. J. Rukin. I won special for best Lizard, and special for most points in the Lizard and selling classes. Messrs. Dandie and Ross won the remaining specials. Many thanks for the grand report of the show, which was truly an excellent one.

Thanks to the splendid advertising medium of your valuable journal we had a grand show on Boxing Day, write Messrs. Bescoby and Hague, secretaries of Doncaster O. and F.S. Such quality with quantity we think Doncaster has never before been favoured with. And we are pleased to say we paid full prize money in all the classes and within 14 days from the date of show. This, we think, should give exhibitors confidence in us to patronise our next venture.

Kindly note my change of address, writes Mr. F. Derby, from Teignmouth Road, Bournbrook, to 319, Upper Dawlish Road, Bournbrook, Birmingham.

Allow me to thank you very much for the grand report which you gave us of our first show, writes Mr. David Kay, hon. secretary of the Musselburgh O.S.

The annual (1908) show of the Thirsk Fanciers' Society has left a balance in the bank of £12 0s. 3d., we gather from the financial statement received from the hon. secretary, (Mr. J. Bell.

Mr. W. Jones has guaranteed a £1 1s. cup for best bird in the gift class, and the society will offer two medals for second and third birds at our open show, to be held February 13th.—C. T. Parkes, assist secretary, City of Wakefield O.S.

I have removed from Stanley Villa, 212, Fishponds Road, to 388, Fishponds Road, Bristol, writes Mr. A. S. Bawn, and have taken into partnership Miss Maud Adams. We shall exhibit in the future under the name of Bawn and Adams. Will secretaries please note?

Kindly thank all who sent for my collie pup which I advertised in Cage Birds last week, writes Mr. J. Cooke (Alton). He was sold same day as issue, but applications keep pouring in from all parts. It shows what a grand paper Cage Birds is to advertise in. I wish it every success.

Llanelly show report credits Mr. Sampson with 2nd in the Yellow Border hen class; it should have read first and second, O'Connell. I also won the silver cup for best team of six Canaries in show, having taken three firsts, two seconds, and two thirds in the Border section.—Dan. O'Connell (Swansea).

The financial statement of the Tong and Dis. C.B.S. for last season shows a balance in hand of £4 12s. 9½d., which must be accounted very good, seeing that the society has only been in existence some nine months or more. The secretary (Mr. J. Smith), and the officials are to be congratulated on the result.

My Siskin, the "Pride of Bath," and my Twite did not compete at the Scottish National Show, writes Mr. F. J. Russell (Bath). I did not send them on account of the severe weather we had. Since that my Siskin has won the cup for the best British Hardbill (house moulted) at the Bath and Dis. F. Show held January 7th.

The Clapham and Dis. C.B.A. continues to make excellent progress, judging by the balance-sheet for 1908, which reaches us from the hon. secretary, Mr. S. H. W. Baker. Though the excellent first open show which they held resulted in a loss of £7 14s. 1d., there still remains a balance on the year's working of £5 12s. 2d.

The Battersea Open C.B.A. at their meeting held on January 6th, we hear, elected Messrs. F. Easterling and F. C. Allen joint secretaries, Mr. Easterling not having sufficient time to carry out the whole of the duties as formerly, owing to pressure of business. It was decided to hold the members' pair and Finch Show on February 3rd.

The two silver cups offered for competition by the Metropolitan C.B.A., viz., novice and champion, writes Mr. R. Dear, the hon. secretary, have been won by the following members: Champion, Mr. G. Harwood; runners up, Messrs. J. Simpson and F. S. Matthes. Novice and Amateurs: Mr. H. Ralph; runners up, Messrs. Sawer and Son, and W. McGregor.

The winners of specials for most points secured at our recent show, writes Mr. W. Pawley, hon. secretary of the Plumstead and Woolwich C.B.S., were as follows: Novice Border Fancy, H. Weaver; British bird classes, W. Francis; K.C.C.B.A., F. G. Gibbs; members, E. Meades; 2nd, A. Scott; 3rd, L. Y. Richardson; 4th, W. Allison.

As there are so many "Williams" in our society, writes Mr. E. H. Williams (Llanelly), I shall be glad if you will mention that it was "E. H." (myself) who won 1st in the clear yellow Yorkshire class, 4th non-fed cock, 4th, non-fed hen, 2nd local Yorks, 1st members' Yorks, also special prize for best Yorks, and two specials for best local members' bird, at the recent Llanelly Show.

We have received the annual balance sheet (duly audited) of the City and Suburban A.C.B. from the hon. secretary and treasurer, Mr. V. Wynn. It evidences a highly satisfactory year's working, on which the society can congratulate itself, for notwithstanding the loss on the annual show, the cash balance of £23 3s. 10d. remains, an increase over that of the previous season. The total assets (including cups, shield, medals, furniture, etc.), amount to no less than £71 17s. 4d.

Will you kindly let fanciers around New Stevenston, Holytown, Bells Hill, Airdrie, and Motherwell districts know that we have got two silver cups for competition, one for fanciers and one for Norwich and Crests, writes Mr. J. Lamb, secretary New Stevenston and Dis. O.S., and that they will be shown shortly in the windows of some of our prominent merchants. All fanciers are invited to attend our next meeting, which will be held in Robb's Hall, on the second Tuesday in March, at 8 o'clock.

Allow me to congratulate you on the beautiful coloured plate and calendar, which were presented with the Christmas Number. The latter was a treat. I have taken Cage Birds from its commencement, little thinking it would attain its present proud position as the leading paper of the Fancy. I have not had the opportunity of advertising lately, as my last advertisement of my surplus stock brought me in contact with so many more fanciers that they almost cleared me out, in fact, compelled me to advertise myself to recruit my stock.—E. W. Sellick (Ashbourne).

Kindly state, writes Mr. W. Pawley, hon. secretary Plumstead and Woolwich C.B.S., that all fanciers are invited to be present at the concert to be held on January 28th, when the president will present the prizes and specials to members.

We were much astonished recently to receive a communication from Mr. J. H. Jones, of Merthyr Tydvil, to the effect that certain Scotch Fancies he was reported to have exhibited at the recent Llanelly Show had never been sent by him to that exhibition. Upon investigating the matter we find that our reporter, Mr. Gamage, of Swansea, in order to secure the publication of Llanelly report in the same issue, requested another fancier to assist him by commenting on the Norwich, Borders, and the Scotch. We should like it, therefore, to be understood that it was not our regular reporter who was responsible for the blunder.

Under the heading of "Wild Bird Life" we published last week a highly interesting account of two Nightingales greeting the New Year with song, though flying about in an outdoor aviary and braving the severe weather. It should have been made clear that this fine aviary is the property of Mr. J. Norman, a well-known resident of Carshalton, the Surrey village which also shelters our Mr. H. Norman, Cage Birds artist-in-chief. The only relationship between the two gentlemen, however, is that which the "brotherhood of birds," so to speak, confers. We regret this was not made clear in the published account. Mr. J. Norman's aviary is a beautiful, spacious place, erected from his own plans, and is known to many Metropolitan, etc., bird-lovers.

Some splendid samples of earthenware goods designed for the use of bird-keepers, reach us from Mr. Edwin Parr (Cobridge), also a copy of his illustrated price list. A great feature of all these goods is that they are glazed with a leadless glaze, absolutely free from any poisonous matter whatever. The sanitary nest pan has a very bold, strong edge, ensuring the bird having a firm grip, while the size is most convenient. The sales of this pan amounted to 23,506. The felt lining which fits inside this (or can be stretched to suit larger one when required), reached the surprising number of 47,664 sold. Samples were also enclosed of Mr. Parr's cut partition drawer, inverted slot duplex drawer, half-circle pan that grips the wires and will remain in any position, oval bath, and medium feeder. Nearly all the patterns are made with machine presses and dies, thus insuring uniformity in sizes. Fanciers should certainly make a point of seeing these goods.

Our Frontispiece.

The ticked buff Coppy cock illustrated on our front page this week is one of the most successful of its kind of recent years. It has won four firsts and one second at five successive shows. It has secured two firsts at both Manchester and Rochdale. It is a bird of good type and great substance, finished off with an excellent coppy.

Our "Black Canary" Puzzle.

Intending competitors should not overlook the fact that entries for our "Black Canary" Puzzle (vide the front page of last week's issue) closes on Thursday next, January 28th. Copies of the Puzzle, printed on cardboard, may be had post free for three-halfpence in stamps, or four copies three-pence post free, from the Manager, Cage Birds, 154, Fleet Street, London, E.C.

Prodigious!

Just as we go to press we learn that a remarkable invention has just been patented and will shortly be put upon the market. It is called "Williams' Sexophone," and it is claimed for it that it will infallibly tell the sex of any "animal, bird, or reptile," and reveal not only whether an egg is fertile, but also the sex of the young. My word, it fairly takes one's breath away. If only it be true, then it looks as though Mr. Rockefeller cannot hope to remain the richest man in the world much longer!

Our Birthday Number.

We have been the delighted recipients of a perfect shoal of congratulatory letters from readers concerning our Birthday Number of last week, and return sincere thanks to the senders for their generous appreciation. Owing to pressure of other matter we are unable to deal further with them in this issue, but will endeavour to do so in our next. There was a great run on the number, and the whole edition was sold right out within a few hours of publication. Will those who have written us stating they were unable to obtain copies kindly accept this explanation. We may possibly have a few copies for disposal a little later on, but can make no promise.

Echoes from Larkhall.

That the show touched high-water mark in the history of the society; that the entries being 1,035, it is the best one day show in Scotland; that the dinner in the "Royal" was also a big success; that hon. president Robert Lambie, Esq., J.P., C.C., makes an ideal chairman; that secretary James McEwan is a splendid organiser and most obliging; that the officials, judges, and the Press were duly "toasted"; that the hall was packed with visitors till the close of the show; that the Larkhall Society offer splendid inducements; that the show is worthy of the confidence of the Fancy, and deserving of support by breeders; that the officials and members seem to vie with each other in looking after the comfort of the visitors and exhibits alike; that all seemed highly satisfied with the results of the show for 1909. —"Scotch Fancy."

CANARY QUERIES.

Plants and Shrubs for Aviary.

W.A.—I rather doubt the possibility of growing any such flowering plants as sweet peas in an aviary with Canaries. If the birds would give them a chance the old-fashioned lupins, wallflowers, larkspurs, and aquelegias, with climbing and dwarf nasturtiums, and a few plants of Canary creeper and an ampelopsis would make up quite an attractive aviary. Box, privet, and elder are among the best shrubs, as the birds do not eat these so badly as they do most other things. The trouble in small aviaries is not only to prevent the birds eating the vegetation, but also to preserve it in a sightly condition and fairly free from the droppings of the birds.

Cause of Death.

Puzzled (Clapham).—It is quite impossible to say definitely what caused the death of your bird. Only a post mortem would have revealed this with certainty. Unless the bird was a very old one, or a natural weakling, I do not think your suggestion of an internal chill very feasible. On the other hand, some of the symptoms point to an apoplectic seizure. I do not think you could have done much to save it beyond keeping it quite quiet, fairly warm, giving it a couple of drops of equal doses of olive oil and brandy in the beak every hour or two until the bowels were acted on by it, and adding a pinch of Epsom salts to its water for a day. A bit of bread sopped in milk would have been the best food. It is quite likely that by pouring a few drops of neat whisky down its throat when in such a condition you unconsciously hastened its passage "over the border."

Ceased Singing.

Saint Anne.—It appears as though your bird really can sing, but—well, he doesn't want to. As he started singing after you first had him, and pulled him through the result of a probably rough journey, it looks as though the cause now lies in some fault of your own management. But, still, as he appears quite healthy it is not very easy to suggest something to make him sing. Perhaps his cage is hung in an unfavourable position, where his attention is too much distracted and turned from his song; or you should ascertain whether it is infested with red-mites. First remedy either or both of these faults, and then try what the following treatment will do for it. Feed on a staple diet of two parts Canary to one part summer rape, twice a week give a small teaspoonful of egg-food or crushed sponge cake with a few grains of gold of pleasure sprinkled over it, once a week a few grains of hemp, and on one other day a few grains of inga. Two or three times a week give a little green-food, free from frost, or sweet juicy fruit, and three times a week for a fortnight ten drops of glycerine and five of aromatic sulphuric acid in the drinking water. For a few days keep a light cover over the cage, removing it for a couple of hours in the morning and evening. This may be dispensed with as soon as the bird appears to settle down to singing.

The Best to Start With.

C. Farrell.—For one that is quite a novice the breed you mention should be exactly reversed to show the best variety to start with, viz., Norwich, Yorkshires, Crests. Taking them in this order the Norwich is a very hardy, easily manageable, and not very difficult variety to breed of a good type capable of winning prizes at small shows. The price of reasonable show birds, assuming you mean moderately good ones, may be anything from 30s. or 40s. upwards. The better class of birds capable of winning in first-class competition may range from £5 to £10 or upwards. Fairly decent birds, capable of breeding good stock, can always be bought for £2 or £3 a pair. Yorkshires are also hardy, easy to breed and manage, but require more skill in mating to breed good ones, and also good training to prepare them for show. The price would be about the same as for Norwich, or a few shillings higher for the cheaper class. Crests are not at all a suitable breed for a novice to "learn on." They require more skilful management to breed of a good type, and yet more skill to prepare for show and exhibit successfully, and taken altogether they are not so hardy as the other two varieties. Finally, they are too expensive to trifle with—that is, of course, speaking of fairly good birds. Crests can be bought almost as cheaply as Norwich, but you must not expect to take the exhibition world by storm with them or their descendants. Decent show birds will cost from £5 to £10. Really good specimens capable of holding their own in good competition would run up nearer £25, or even more than that.

The Pink Eye.

"One in Doubt."—(1) A pink-eyed Canary is invariably one that is either a Cinnamon or has an appreciable proportion of Cinnamon blood in its veins. The pink eye is a characteristic of the Cinnamon variety. In some birds the red tinge is not very palpable, except by looking at the eye sideways in a good light. Such birds when viewed "full face," so to speak, appear to have dark eyes. Young birds in the nest show the most pronounced red tinge, and the pink eye is easily seen in them even in birds which eventually appear to become dark eyed unless viewed in the right direction. (2) To breed these pink-eyed birds for Mule breeding your quickest way would probably be to mate a pink-eyed Norwich cock, which, of course, would mean that it is more or less closely related to the Cinnamon, with your sib hens, and either a pink-eyed or a Cinnamon-marked hen with one of your sib cocks; and retain all the clear young which show the pink-eye distinctly for mating back into your sibs, gradually weeding out any green-marked or Cinnamon birds to keep the sibs as clear as you can. Of course, you may have to infuse fresh pink-eyed blood from time to time.

Roller with Cold.

S. A. Brough.—The bird has, without doubt, been exposed to a draught or chill in some way. Feed it as frequently advised in this column; see that the necessary precautions are taken to prevent exposure in the future, and keep it in a comfortable, but not over-heated, temperature, which is fairly equable day and night. Having duly attended to these points, add twenty drops of whiskey, six each of glycerine, and syrup of squills, and two of oil of eucalyptus (well shaken together) to the drinking water two days in every three for a fortnight, or you may cease giving it earlier, if its use is not required that length of time. On each of the days when you omit giving the mixture in the water, give a small teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of cod-liver oil emulsion well mixed in it.

A Weary Willie.

M. Cleary.—Your bird is probably in an overfed condition, assuming, that is, that it is not an old one, as you say nothing on that point. Your feeding is also very faulty. Feed on a staple of plain Canary only, with about half a teaspoonful of summer rape, given separately twice a week. On two other days each week give half a teaspoonful—not more—of egg food or crushed sponge cake, whichever you are using. A meal worm four or five times a week would also be very beneficial. Give nothing else in the way of food for a couple of months, except perhaps a scrap of green food when no frost is about. In the drinking water give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence for three consecutive days, afterwards every second day for a week, and on the alternate days twenty drops of Chemical Food. At the end of this time give four drops of aromatic sulphuric acid in the water for a few days to complete the treatment.

Lost Use of Legs.

W. Easton, jun.—The trouble seems to have lasted some time, so am afraid I cannot hold out much hope of your curing the bird. It would have been a help had you said whether the bird was in a thin or plump condition of body.—Try following treatment for a month, and report result, referring to this reply. Keep it in a moderate-sized cage, in a comfortable temperature; see that draughts and chills are absolutely avoided, and that there is no trouble from red mites. Feed on a staple of three parts Canary to one part summer rape, and give a half-teaspoonful of hemp twice a week separately, once a week a few grains of linseed, and every second day a half-teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with two drops of cod-liver oil emulsion mixed in it. A small spray of groundsel or chickweed may be given three times a week when available, and quite free from frost. In the drinking water give every second day for a week as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence, and on alternate days four drops of aromatic sulphuric acid. After the first week give, instead of the above, twenty drops of Chemical Food every second day, and two of tincture of steel (in the water) on alternate days.

To Breed for Colour.

Novice.—The right birds to put together to breed birds with deep yellow plumage are undoubtedly those which, in addition to complying with the fundamental rule of mating yellow to buff, and clear with marked, also have a fairly strong tincture of green blood running in their veins. Your birds, which are very whitish in colour, have probably been bred too long from clears, and perhaps from double buffs, and inbred. They may possibly be very useful birds for Mule breeding. However, to start afresh, and breed your colour, you should get a variegated yellow cock, a ticked buff hen, and a clear buff hen with plenty of under-colour—one bred from double-yellows or from variegated parents would be best. From these you will breed a large proportion of ticked or variegated birds, and the clears will be in the minority, but the natural colour will show a great improvement. Next year you may introduce either a green hen or a rich coloured variegated yellow to mate with one of the young clear buff cocks, and then mate the clear hens from that mating, assuming, of course, other typical points are suitable, back to the original variegated cock. The real secret, if it can be so-called, of breeding rich coloured birds is to have plenty of green blood always running in the strain. This means breeding a large proportion of marked birds, but it is best to grip the idea from the first that this has to be endured, as it is practically impossible to breed from clears year after year without losing a good deal of natural colour. There is very little to choose in the hardihood and ease of management of Yorkshire and Norwich. The balance may be the least trifle in favour of the latter, but the difference is not very appreciable.

Ideal v. Sibs.

"Devon."—As you clearly want to breed some good typical Yorkshires for exhibition, it is rather a clashing of interests, or perhaps it would be best to say a waste of good material, to throw in the chances of breeding light Mules as a kind of side issue. For the latter purpose you want clear birds in which the green blood is in a sense obliterated, whereas in breeding good exhibition Yorkshires you want a fair amount of green blood in the bird to keep up the natural depth of colour. You do not say whether you want to produce cinnamon or green marked birds, so I assume you are not particular which, and would advise you to mate the hen with a cinnamon-marked buff cock. By this mating you will breed a majority of cinnamon-marks, and ticks, with a few stray green-marks, if your birds have any near kinship with green blood. As regards the cock, it is not unlikely your management was more or less the cause of its condition. Perhaps had you written the vendor a courteous note he might have met you in the matter.

Inspected Seed.

J. L., Novice.—Judging from what you say about the husks sticking in the hopper, as though damp, I am inclined to think your seed is at the root of the bird's trouble. Chew a little and see if it tastes quite sweet, or musty. Also examine it closely with a pocket lens if you have one, to see whether what may appear like light coloured dust to the naked eye is in reality a multitude of minute insects. You may even see movement with the naked eye if you carefully watch a particular heap of "dust," or you may detect their presence by rubbing some of the seed through the thumb and finger, when the seed may feel clammy, and the fingers will smell quite nauseous. If you find the seed thus infested the remedy is obvious. Give only good sound sweet seed, in perfectly clean hoppers. For a month feed on a mixture of two parts Canary to one part summer rape as a staple. Give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of sherry and one of cod-liver oil emulsion, mixed in it every second day. A scrap of green food may be given on the alternate days when quite free from frost. In the drinking water give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence for three consecutive days, and after that give twenty drops of whiskey, five each of syrup of squills and dandelion juice, and two of oil of eucalyptus well shaken together every second day for a fortnight, and on the alternate days, give twelve drops of Chemical Food in the water See they are quite free from draughts. Give baths only when the weather is quite mild.

Father and—What?

Sykes.—Continue same method of feeding for the old cock as advised before, but add one drop of cod-liver oil emulsion to the sherry-moistened sponge cake, and mix well together. In the drinking water give twenty drops of Chemical Food every second day for a fortnight, and on alternate days two drops each tincture of steel and tincture of gentian, with five drops dandelion juice, well shaken together. If the bird is not well at the end of the fortnight, still continue the general feeding and management, but omit the drugs for a week, giving pure water only during that week; then begin with the medicines as above, and give as usual for another fortnight. As regards the young bird, I rather suspect it is a hen. Give a little sponge cake, same as advised for the cock, every second day for a week, and if it does not come into fuller song I think you may safely regard it as a hen. It will be quite old enough to breed with this year, but do not mate up before the end of March.

Plucking the Mote.

W. Coates.—I hope you are not too premature in your strictures on the vendor. I feel sure the person would meet any business-like representation in a fair manner. You do not even say how long you have had the bird, and it is just possible your treatment may not be quite faultless. Certainly, I do not consider a diet of German rape with only a little Canary to be an ideal one. Feed on a mixture of two parts Canary to one part summer rape as a staple. Give separately a few grains of hemp twice a week, and a small teaspoonful of egg food, or crushed sponge cake as a substitute, and mix two drops of sherry and one drop of cod-liver oil emulsion in it each time for a fortnight to see if it comes on song any better. Give three times a week a scrap of green-food, quite free from frost, or a bit of banana as a substitute, the same number of times. See it is free from draught, and if it appear at all hoarse add twenty drops of whisky, ten of glycerine, and five of syrup of squills to the water for a day or two.

Prolonged Moulting.

J.C.—You are not feeding the birds correctly. They are also probably being exposed to draughts or great variations of temperature, which must also be remedied. Keep them in a comfortable place, not necessarily over-heated, but of equable temperature. Feed on a staple of three parts Canary to one part summer rape mixed together, and give separately twice a week a few grains only of hemp, and on two other days a few grains of linseed. Every second day give a half-teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with two drops of sherry and one drop cod-liver oil well mixed. Give these extras alternately, so a different one is given each day. Cease giving cayenne, milk sop, and all other messes, and give nothing but the above in the way of food, except it be a scrap of green-food, when no frost is about, or a bit of banana. In the drinking water give twenty drops Chemical Food every second day, on the days when you are giving sponge cake, and on the alternate days four drops tincture of steel. Stop all drugs as soon as moulting has ceased.

Business-like.

E. G. P.—(1) In a general way, I certainly think you may achieve your object quite well by breeding with the birds flying loose as you suggest, and in that way it is decidedly less trouble to attend to them properly, but whether it is more easily understood I doubt, as the same foods must be prepared and supplied. Still, there is nothing but what your wife could fully understand and be able to do just as well as you if you let her watch you mix and prepare the food and feed the birds a few times. (2) You seem to have got this nicely fitted up. A cover of netting over the fire-place should not be omitted if there is an open chimney. A cover of loose thread netting might also be useful over the door in the wire partition to prevent any bird from escaping when the door was opened to admit anyone. The nest boxes might also be placed on shelves, which would help to prevent casualties to eggs or young accidentally dragged out of the nest, and a few evergreen bushes fastened up around the walls would be useful as perches or nesting site. Provide plenty of nesting sites; about twice as many as there are hens to occupy them. (3) As you want good singers for the class of demand you wish to meet, ordinary Rollers would suit best, or a cross with Roller cocks and Norwich hens; this would give you a bigger and better-looking bird, but not such sweet singers. The aviary will accommodate four cocks and ten or twelve hens. Put in all clear or very lightly ticked hens, and marked or variegated cocks.

Crests, Bald Behind.

Novice.—If the birds are quite free from red mites and agree perfectly well, there is only one other explanation, and that, unfortunately, is also the most probable. A bald patch in this position is a very common fault with Crests, and is a natural defect, for which there is no cure. Your only chance is to try to breed it out of your birds by mating them with birds having very long, dense, leafy headgears, and if horny at back so much the better; also, if possible, they should be bred from birds which have not shown their defect for a few generations. But your remark that the places now looked rather red or "raw" is very suggestive of the feathers having been plucked out by some of their companions. If you cannot watch them sufficiently close to ascertain whether this is the real cause, you should cage the two birds separately for a few weeks to give the feathers a chance to grow. If they have been plucked out, the new feathers should appear in about three weeks.

Greenhouse Aviary.

New Reader.—(1) As you seem to prefer letting the birds fly loose, and only require to breed songsters, there is no reason why you should not dispense with cages. The place as it stands will accommodate from eighty to ninety birds at its full capacity. By wiring off the portion at one end for flight, as you suggest, the larger space will hold sixty birds comfortably, and the smaller space twenty-five. If you divide it in this way I should rather advise you to reserve the small space for the adults, turning in five or six cocks and fifteen hens. Then remove each brood to a nursery when they could begin to crack seed, hang it on the wire a day or two, and then release the young in the larger space. In this way you would get neither space so much overcrowded towards the end of the season. Your suggestions for removing most of the glass and painting the roof are very good. But do not remove enough glass from the front to make the inside appear dismal, and provide as much ventilation as possible. Sunblinds will be very useful in summer, and "lights" that will open. These alone, if efficient, should prevent the interior getting overheated. (2) Hartz Rollers and St. Andreasberg are merely trade terms. There is practically no difference. You should get fairly good birds for breeding ordinary songsters at about 7s. 6d. to 10s. each for cocks, and 2s. 6d. each for hens. A more accomplished songster, at about 20s, would be useful to teach the young. (3) Certainly, it is very advisable to "paint" the glass in the roof. Dabbing the glass all over on both sides with a lump of moist putty would answer admirably, or you could paint in with "summer cloud," known to horticulturists with glass places. (4) The putty method is the best and simplest I know. It can be easily washed off with a little warm soda water and Monkey Brand.

Brevities.

Rape and Canary (S. Booth).—No. 1 sample of Canary is a very nice, good-sized, clean, and bright seed, of very good quality. No. 2, summer rape, is also a very good sample of rape. Its flavour seems to suggest it is rather new, in which case it will improve by a few months' proper storage. You seem to be "in luck" with two such samples.

A Mopy Crest (Troubled).—In addition to the diet of plain Canary, give the hen half-a-teaspoonful of rape twice a week, and every second day for a fortnight half-a-teaspoonful of egg food, or crushed sponge cake, with two drops sherry and one cod-liver oil emulsion mixed. A few grains of hemp may be given once a week, and on another day a few grains only of Inga. Give all alternately. In the water give a pinch of Epsom salts for two days, and afterwards two drops each tincture of steel and tincture of gentian, and five dandelion juice, well shaken together, every second day for a week. See she is not exposed to draughts. A piece of banana three or four times a week will be better than any green-food.

Early or Late Ones? (W. West).—It is certainly uncommon, but by no means very rare, for Canaries to be hatched in December; neither is it at all advisable to allow or encourage the birds to breed at this time. You have probably been feeding them too highly, and, maybe, keeping them in a warm kitchen, which would quite account for the circumstances.

Teaching the Young Idea (S.P.).—If the Rollers are really March-hatched birds they would have been in full song months ago. Of course, they would start singing without any proper tuition from other birds. The only difference lack of tuition makes is that one's birds sing a common, uncultured song. Even late-hatched young birds, which are well through the moult, should be coming in full song now. Candidly, I rather fear your birds are just common German hens.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

A Snow Bunting.

West Coast.—Glad to hear you are so enamoured with the looks of your Snow Bunting. They are certainly fine birds when in spotless winter garb (or so much of the latter, that is, as is white). As to whether they are "interesting" birds, well, that depends on yourself—personally, I find all birds interesting. Still, I must candidly admit that there are other birds which could claim to have more interesting traits and mannerisms than Buntings; and I have kept every species of the latter, except the purely foreign species. As regards food, they are all alike, and the only "stock mixture" you will need is plain canary seed. Few will eat any quantity of other seeds, though now and again small oats, wild seed mixture, rape, cracked hemp, coarse oatmeal, maw, and one or two other seeds will be picked over, and a few eaten, but not sufficient to warrant their inclusion in a "stock mixture." To make up a little variety in the diet, it is best to give a feed of soaked ants' eggs frequently, and live insect food (mealworms, flies, scoured gentles, small beetles and grubs generally) according to season. Fresh (live) ants' eggs are relished exceedingly. "Shop" ants' eggs (get the best quality only) are well liked if soaked in a little new milk, drained on a cloth, and then given the birds. Many Finches, too, appreciate them when prepared in this way. It is well to mix a sprinkling of a good insectivorous food among the ants' eggs, gradually increasing the quantity, as in this way Buntings (other species, too) can be got to eat it readily; and it is very good for them. Green-food these birds are not keen on, but you can always offer them a sprig of whatever you may happen to have in the place. Corn Buntings will usually eat a little "seeding green-food" (grasses, shepherd's purse, etc.), as will also Reed Buntings, etc.

Show Cage for Small Softbill.

Amateur.—I feel sure that I have dealt with this matter before this season, but probably under heading of a cage for some particular species. But there is not a different type of cage for each species (a lively time big exhibitors would have if there were). Most of the smaller insectivorous birds, in fact (birds like the Nightingale, Redstart, Robin, etc.), look at their best in the same style of cage. It is difficult to describe on paper, and only a fancier well up in the art of cage-making could turn it out for himself. You will be quite safe in writing to any good cage-maker advertising in our columns. The only kind I object to are those with food and water vessels (made of tin generally), which push in close to the floor of the cage, for then both food and water get smothered in whatever is used as the floor covering, especially if this latter be sawdust. It is then almost impossible for the bird to find any food. I like the pattern where food and water vessels swing in through openings cut into the bottom rail, and are on a level with the two bottom perches. They can still be made of tin (unbreakable). If glass vessels are used they need to fit quite tightly. A third perch should be screwed to the back of the cage, about half-way up, and be in length about half the width (front to back) of the cage. This the bird can "retire" on, and, being short, it serves to keep him off the wires. When in position, the three perches form the familiar "triangle" pattern, viewed from front of cage.

A Promising Greenfinch.

Stonehouse.—You seem to have a highly promising bird if he is, as you put it, "as large as a small Hawfinch, and deep green and yellow in colour." What a whopper (the bird, I mean, of course). You needn't worry a cent about colour-feeding such a specimen as this. Given a rattling good big bird, with a wide, bold head, and a very wide, well-rounded chest, it can be shown with every prospect of winning a prize or two, whether it be a buff or a jonque. It is essential that an exhibition Greenfinch should be very steady. A good moult (commenced early and quickly got over) and a free use of the bath are all that are necessary to ensure a Greenfinch having a tight-fitting, sleek jacket. For food, the most important item is a daily feed of good, sound (full kernelled) sunflower (or half sunflower, half safflower) seed. This can be offered in a separate dish, or placed among the stock mixture. The latter should be made up as follows: Canary and teazle, two pints each, hemp, summer rape, charlock and linseed half a pint each. Wild seed mixture, and some good maker's special packet Finch mixture, can be occasionally offered for a change, while sunflower heads (gathered from the garden) full of seed, thistle and hard-heads, seeding chickweed, groundsel and shepherd's purse, should be freely given as in season. On such a menu, nicely varied, your Greenfinch should flourish, and come out a credit to you. Don't forget the bath.

Crossbills and Grosbeaks.

F. M. Dale.—Neither Crossbills nor Grosbeaks can really be described as rare, though the latter (I presume you are referring to Pine Grosbeaks) do not come into the English market in large numbers, or frequently—there seems, however, to have been a fair supply recently. Both are birds of the winter season. Crosshills are sometimes exceedingly common. They are not difficult to keep once used to cage life and food (the trouble, of course, with all birds). They are apt to "go light" in the early stages of captivity. I have been very successful by giving at first a mixture of crushed shelled nuts (mixed, as obtainable now at many fruiterers, etc.), insectivorous food and mealworms—not too much of the two latter ingredients, and rubbing them well among the crushed nuts. A little whole seed (hemp, sunflower, etc.), can be put amongst it, in increasing quantity. Crosshills make fairly good show birds. Both your birds may be given for seed, sunflower, hemp, and canary seed; and for animal food three or four mealworms daily, with any other insects you can get. A few berries, haw, privet, black, and so on, also the core and pips of apples, smashed walnuts, etc., and ripe fruit are relished. Offer any of the other seed in general use now and again; also small maize, wheat, and the like. Sometimes they will eat a little, and variety is good. After being caged for a length of time, they will eat a little of many kinds of greenfood. The Crossbill will find a great fund of amusement, and a supply of food also, in a few fir and pine cones, if you can get them with the seed in. He will also find you some employment in providing him with new perches, for he will use his spare moments in "chewing" these up. Don't give the fir, etc., cones in a "green" state. Gather them ripe, when about to open; if necessary lay them in a warm place (such as a cool oven) until they open.

Another Goldfinch Enthusiast.

Amateur, B.W.—I think that in quite recent answers I dealt with all the points you raise. Evidently you overlooked them; note reply to "W.R." January 9th. Your fresh-caught Goldfinches should be put for a time in a very quiet spot, and you must not go disturbing them every few minutes. Let them have niger, maw and cracked hemp (cracked afresh every day), as much as they will eat; also, in addition, canary, teazle, linseed, cracked sunflower and coarse oatmeal. An important point is to be sure and see the captives get at the water—both water and seed are better inside the cage, as fresh-caught birds can hardly be expected to understand putting their heads through holes to feed and drink. Seed and water should be "under their noses." If you cage them off singly, then a cage of the type known as a "back cage," but larger than the usual regulation pattern in size, is very good for the first few weeks. In addition to the above, a plentiful supply of thistle-heads, knap-weed, sow-thistle, seeding groundsel, etc., is simply invaluable with such birds. Of course, you are too late to gather these things now, but thistle (and dandelion) seed can be bought. When you have a bird look a little "thick," try it at once with a dose of sulphate of soda—as much as will lie on a shilling dissolved in two tablespoonfuls of drinking water. Repeat, but at half strength, after a day's interval on plain water.

Fresh-caught Linnets.

Jack P.—I seem to have answered this question quite recently. There are many ways of feeding Linnets, I know, but I am sure you will have nothing but your present ill-luck unless you give the fresh-caught ones soaked seed of some kind. My method of feeding newly-caught Linnets is as follows:—For their stock food I mix one pint each of best canary, and sound, ripe teazle, with half a pint each of genuine summer rape, linseed, and charlock seeds. Some real good, new teazle is now on the market. Charlock you might get as English rape seed (which, however, is really a larger, quite black, seed), though several kinds of seeds, which are indistinguishable from each other, are sold under the latter name. It is sometimes dark bluish-red, almost black, in colour; sometimes exactly like summer rape; and it tastes very hot when chewed—hence its name of "mustard" seed. In addition to the stock mixture, in a separate dish I give an unlimited supply of maw seed and niger, also lightly-cracked hemp seed. These I gradually discontinue, arranging to drop them altogether after the birds have been in my possession twelve to fourteen days. As green food (or "soft seed" food), I provide summer rape and sunflower seed soaked in cold water until just commencing to germinate (dabbing it dry in a towel before giving it to the birds), and seeding shepherd's-purse, plantain, and chickweed and flowering groundsel tops, when obtainable. If I think my birds were caught during a wet spell, I soak the stock mixture for them at first. I very seldom lose a bird on the above treatment.

Red Mite.

Miss Bull.—Birds kept in heated rooms are often troubled with red-mite. Unfortunately, their owners only too often do not know whether their pets are troubled or not. An infested bird should be thoroughly well sprayed on three or four successive days with water which has had the chill just taken off, and which has been made to taste fairly strongly of quassia infusion (obtainable from any chemist). Keep him warm and out of draughts (covered up) whilst he gets dry and in a clean cage, of course. The best treatment for cages is a stoving for ten or fifteen minutes in a just moderately hot oven. Afterwards, if of wood, give them a good coat (inside) of sanitary washable distemper (obtainable in suitable shades from most oil and colourmen). Failing the stoving, paint the cage thoroughly all over inside and outside with a solution of camphor in turpentine, adding one ounce of the former to one pint of the spirit, and well shaking it up. Not a solitary mite will survive the ordeal. Work the solution well into all cracks and joints. It may be necessary to re-varnish the outsides of the cages after these operations. In about an hour after using the fluid the cages will be dry enough to treat with the distemper as mentioned above. See that no mites are left in cracks and crevices near where the cage may have hung or stood. There are other effectual methods of dealing with red mites, but the above does not involve the handling of the bird, often a dangerous item with the unskilled. Perches, etc., must be also dealt with, of course.

A Trio.

In Hopes.—1. The Chaffinch-Canary cross is exceedingly rare (didn't you notice the correspondence concerning it a month or two ago?). In fact, it is extremely doubtful whether it has ever been accomplished—to the point, that is, of rearing young. I know fanciers—and fanciers who command my respect—who state they have had fertile eggs from this mating. So you can live "in hopes." The behaviour of your couple is distinctly promising. Correctly speaking, any young would be "hybrids"; but, looked at in the fanciers' way, they would be "mules," the latter peculiar name being widely understood to imply hybrids which have Canary blood in them. 2. Adult British Finches do not copy one another's song to any appreciable extent. Birds caught when very young will do so; so will hand-reared ones, of course. "Call" notes, however, are often picked up. 3. Yes; you should certainly cut off any superfluous growth of the lower mandible; top and bottom should be the same length.

Breeding in an Aviary.

F.U.—The number mentioned is too high. Besides, half a dozen cock Finches will be quite enough for the 10 hen Canaries. A cock Bullfinch would be a very doubtful breeder; also a Chaffinch. You must on no account put two of the latter in the place. However, you might leave the following in: two Linnets, two Goldfinches, one Greenfinch, Bullfinch, and Chaffinch. If any turned out very spiteful (vicious) you would need to remove such offenders. I have often spoken concerning the uncertainty of success in aviaries containing a lot of birds, and mixed species (see reply to "J.T.B" last week), but with average luck you ought to raise a few youngsters in your place. Dot the nest-boxes about in every likely spot, and mind you have a much larger number than there are hens in the place. They don't want to be put "in the darkest place"—put some in the "shady nooks," but put some in the well-lighted spots also.—It is astonishing how hens will differ as to the best place for house-keeping purposes. Many will arrange their nests right close to the outside wirework; and some hen Canaries are freakish enough to build on the ground. I remember one of my pairs of Lesser Redpolls built in a white earthenware nest-pan, and used nothing but a glaring white nesting material (charpie). This struck me as an astonishing departure from the conventional

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Lost Use of Legs and Wings.

M. Shanks.—I can at present give you but little help, as your letter gives me no idea as to its cause. I can only advise, as a palliative, a few sips of chilled and weak brandy and water occasionally as a stimulant, and for one day put half a teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in one tablespoonful of water, and give nothing else to drink for one day till this has been consumed, following this by making the drinking water the colour of port wine with Parrish's Chemical Food. I strongly suspect improper dietary over a long period is very largely responsible. However this may be, if you will send me at once full particulars of your system of treating and dieting the bird, I shall be in a position to help you, and will reply at once. Keep it warm, and while it is never wise to make abrupt changes of diet, slops, table scraps, and the like should not be given.

Grey Parrot Weak and Ill.

M.A.—It is the diet that is all wrong with your bird, and if it has been dieted on milk sop, etc., before coming into your possession, I am not surprised at its condition. The drops of brandy and the chemical food are very satisfactory. But this bird will improve very little till you get it on a proper diet; if it can be accomplished without starving the bird, stop the milk sop at once, and as it has been accustomed to soft food, give it some boiled maize daily; boil it till it is soft, drain all water away, and soak into the maize half a teaspoonful of the chemical food. Note: the maize only keeps fresh one day, and the food vessel must be kept strictly clean, and the seed mixture advised in this column regularly, with ripe fruit, plain biscuit, nuts, and a little unseasoned boiled potato. You will, of course, regularly supply cuttlefish, grit, and water. At the risk of its being hungry stop the milk sop for a day, at any rate, and if you find it eating the boiled maize and other things, do not give the milk sop again; at the same time, you must perforce give milk sop to prevent starvation, but only on this ground, for if you do not get it on to a wholesome diet, you will lose the bird. Only give the Dinneford's Magnesia sufficiently often to keep its bowels freely moving, not watery loose. For a month or more put sufficient chemical food in the drinking water to make it the colour of pale port wine. Cleanse its nostrils daily with diluted glycothymoline. If you diet the bird as advised, and get it away from the milk sop, the bird should gradually recover, but if you continue its present dietary, its death is merely a matter of time and suffering. As it has been let get into such a bad condition, you had better report progress with full particulars a fortnight hence.

Budgerigars or Finches.

Tipperary.—I think you will find the Budgerigars, Cockatiels, and Rosellas the most suitable for you to commence with; they will require, when breeding, scarcely any extra attention; at least, none should be necessary. Supply Canary, white and spray millet seeds, oats, green-food, ripe fruit, grit, cuttlefish, and water. Keep the aviary strictly clean, hang up at least double the number of husks and nest logs that you have pairs of birds; supply ample perching accommodations (natural branches of varying thickness are the best). The birds should be but little trouble, and a source of much pleasure and interest to you. Values: Green Budgerigars, 5s. 6d. to 6s. 6d.; Cockatiels, 8s. 6d. to 10s. 6d.; Rosellas, 30s. to 35/- per pair.

Another Feather Picker.

F.C.S.—I can give you but little help till you inform me how you have been treating and dieting the bird. In the meantime, give the bird several doses of Diuneford's Magnesia—one teaspoonful to two tablespoonfuls of water; leave two clear days between each dose. On other days, that is, when not giving the magnesia, put sufficient Parrish's Chemical Food in the drinking water to make it the colour of pale port wine. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food. It is very difficult, in fact almost impossible, to cure the habit of feather picking once it has been indulged in for any lengthy period, but supply the information asked for, and I will try and help you further. Spray the bird every other day with Quassia solution, keeping it strictly out of draught till dry.

A Hardbill with Some Song.

E. M. F.—I should recommend either a Green Singing Finch, Grey-necked Serin, or an Alario Finch. If you watch our advertisement columns you should be able to soon pick one or other of the above up. At least, I think the two latter are being offered at the present time. All are as hardy as a Canary, once they have got over the hardships of the voyage to this country; but there is always some risk attending the purchase of a newly-imported bird. Treat much as you would a Canary, with the exception that you must supply some white millet seed, and also millet in the ear. A little ripe apple or any other fruit they will take makes a good substitue for green-food during the winter months. Of course, if you intend keeping it, as I gather, in an all-wire cage, you must not hang the cage where a draught can blow through it, and also you must keep it below the level of the gas-jets.

Rump Almost Bare of Feathers

H. L.—I hope you have not got hold of a specimen suffering from so-called "French moult"; if so, it is probably constitutional and incurable. However, we must hope such is not the case. For the remainder of the winter, make the drinking water the colour of pale port wine with Parrish's Chemical Food. Keep a piece of clean cuttlefish in the cage; if it will eat it, give it a small piece of sponge cake daily, but prepare it so: lightly damp it, and dust it with flour of sulphur. Get a box of spermaceti ointment from your chemist, and rub a very little into the bare parts, but not sufficient to make it really greasy. Diet: Canary, millet, oats, with a little hemp, say a teaspoonful daily; a little of such ripe fruit as it will take. I should give it a cage large enough for it to crawl about a little. Do not keep it too near the fire, but in some warm light corner, out of draught, where it will be snug and yet get some fresh air. Is it strong on its legs, or do these seem too weak for it to walk fairly erect? Treat as above, and report progress in about two or three weeks' time.

Treatment for an Amazon.

W. H. C.—I expect you have been dieting this bird altogether wrong, hence its condition. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food. Diet: A little boiled maize—boil till soft, drain away all water, and then allow 20 drops of Parrish's Chemical Food to soak into it—daily, or every other day. Note, it only keeps fresh one day, and the food vessel must be kept strictly clean. Also keep a supply of the following seed mixture continually in the cage:—Two parts each Canary seed, oats, wheat, dari, and one part each hemp, maize, and sunflower seed, the whole to be well mixed. Also give, so as to vary the diet, ripe fruit, nuts, a little boiled potato (unseasoned), and plain biscuits. The above should supply an ample range of diet, and suffice to keep the bird fit and well. For one day make its drinking water quite saline with Epsom salts; afterwards well colour the drinking water for some weeks with the Chemical Food. Examine the bird closely, and if there are any parasites, spray it every other day with quassia solution, keeping the bird carefully out of draught till dry. You would, I think, find the late Dr. W. T. Greene's Popular Parrakeets, 1s. plus postage, from "C.B." office, very helpful.

Pekin Robins, etc.

Cerebus.—I think you would find the following mixture more wholesome:—One part each good ants' cocoons, dried flies, crushed puppy biscuit, and crumbled sponge cake; it will keep indefinitely in a tin or jar in some dry cupboard or other store place. Take a portion and make crumbly moist for use. Each bird should get two or three mealworms or other insects daily; also a liberal supply of such ripe fruit as they fancy. A small portion of white millet seed will do them no harm. Let their quarters be as roomy as possible, and they should do well. I have known several who have so kept Moustache and Alexandrine Parrakeets, but of course with birds of such strong individuality as Parrots, when introducing larger species with smaller, they must be kept under close observation till the demeanour of the individual pair or pairs be ascertained. Alexandrines bred in an amateur's aviary in this country during 1908; and if your birds are adult, as soon as they have had time to settle down, they should do the same, but often they do not do so during the first year of their occupancy of new quarters.

What Parrot?

C. H. C.—I fear from your description I cannot definitely name your Parrakeet straight away. You possibly have some very uncommon species, though your description, except in one or two features, reads very like a Neophema, very possibly the Orange-bellied Parrakeet. Could you make me a rough diagram, roughly marking out the various areas of colour, by either lettering the patches or writing the name of colour in same; also indicating proportionate length of tale? If you will kindly supply me these particulars, I shall then hope to be in a position to name your bird. Even well-known species are not easy to name from a written description, and the difficulty is very much intensified when it refers to some little-known or very rare species, which is probably the case with your bird.

Cockateels Not Breeding.

Grimston.—Of recent years I have heard of many birds acting just as yours have done; at least, I have just such a pair, very fine and robust, and yet which only play at housekeeping. They are of exceptionally fine appearance and tame, so, though unproductive, they are retained. I strongly suspect the present stock of Cockateels in this country is aviary bred, and when purchasing one frequently gets brother and sister, which is quite sufficient to account for such behaviour. It would be worth while trying to make an exchange with some other aviculturist with one of your birds. I have had many such instances brought to my notice where they had the aviary to themselves, and I don't think your other Parrakeets have contributed in any way to their unproductiveness. I am presuming you have at least double the number of nesting husks and boxes that you have pairs of birds. A little close observation will soon reveal whether they are interfering with each other's nesting arrangements.

Crossing Gouldian Finches.

Lovebird.—Hybrid breeding is always a more or less elusive pursuit, though the numbers of British Hybrids now being raised is fairly numerous, but the attempts at such are far more numerous still. I have been successful in raising several Foreign Hybrids, but in each instance it has been in my largest aviary, and the result of the chance pairing of odd birds. If you are able to get a Cherry Finch, this would be one likely to pair up with your Gouldian, as would also either Aurora Finches or Long-tail, White-eared, and Masked Grassfinches. I have recently seen a rather handsome Cherry Finch and Masked Grassfinch Hybrid. So the thing is not by any means improbable or impossible. At the same time success may not crown your efforts during the first season. Most of the Mannikins interbreed fairly readily among themselves, and also with Bengalese and Silverbills, but if you put up a lot of mixed birds to take your luck with, there must not be true pairs of the same species.

Sexing White-eared Conures.

R. L. F. S. Bentley.—This is a very pretty, but also a very quarrelsome species, and they are not safe with any species smaller or weaker than themselves, and also have the reputation of maiming fledglings of other Parrakeets, etc., confined with them. If you have a small aviary, about 6ft. square, you can devote to them, they will probably breed. I really cannot give you any certain sexual distinctions; such as I know are merely comparative, but my experience with this species has been confined to a single pair, and I really cannot say whether such distinctions are constant. I believe the hen to be slightly smaller, and her plumage of not quite so rich a hue. If I had to pick a pair out of a lot I should so choose, unless I saw two of them fondling and caressing each other; in such a case you would be quite safe in accepting them as a pair. The beak of the hen is also, I believe, more slender than that of the male. To sum up, failing being able to choose two which are caressing one another, carefully examine such as are together, choosing two which appear to be about the same age, one a little larger than the other; also a little brighter and with a stout beak, and the other the opposite of this. I cannot vouch for the difference in size of the beak of male and female, but believe that such is the case.

Brevities.

Sea Sand for Cages (Thank You).—You need be under no misgiving as to using all sea sand or merely a portion of it. Providing it is clean, it is better than the ordinary kind. At least, I may say all the sand used in my aviaries comes to me straight from the beach by the kindness of a friend. As to how you use it, it depends what the respective kinds cost you; if the ordinary is the cheaper, then use that in quantity and sprinkle the sea sand on top.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Goldfinch (C. Harrison).—Chronic softening of liver and recent inflammation, possibly caused by frosted groundsell.

Canary (A. G. P.).—Disease of liver, and ending with rupture of blood-vessel of that organ. This state is probably hereditary.

GENERAL.

Answered by the Editor.

The Blank Squares (C.P.A.).—Exactly where the four squares missing from the left-hand corner should be placed in the finished picture is part of the puzzle, and a part readers must try to solve for themselves. Will attend to other item with pleasure.

Using Deposit System (W. Dunlop, sen.).—We are always advising readers ourselves to use the deposit system, and we really do not see what good would be done by the publication of your letter. If you will conform to rule 8 we will write the advertiser for you, with pleasure.

Closing of Palace Show (Rev. G. H. Raynor).—The show is closed at 10 p.m. each day, except on the last day (Tuesday), when 4 p.m. is the closing hour.

Letter (J.B.).—It had to be held over owing to pressure on space.

Colour Feeding (H. A. Brown).—Both "Canary Breeding for Beginners" (7d.) and "House's Canary Manual" (1s. 2d.) deal fully with the colour-feeding of birds. They are published from this office, and the above prices include postage.

Proceedings (R.D.McM.).—We are surprised at the contents of your letter, for, so far as we know, the individual mentioned is a person of standing.

Satisfactory Purchases (J. Tipton).—We are delighted to know the advertiser in question has given you such satisfaction. We would suggest that you send him a testimonial, so that he may use it in our advertisement columns, when it would no doubt help him to get further business.

Two Points (W. B. Jephson).—(1) We believe the sole right to take photographs in the Crystal Palace is vested in Messrs Russell, the well-known photographers. (2) Sunflower seed taken from plants in the garden is very good for such birds as will eat it—Greenfinches are passionately fond of it.

CORRESPONDENCE.

MAKING A FOUNTAIN FOR AN AVIARY.

SIR,—Could any of your many readers inform me how I could make a simple fountain, with a spray at the top? I intend to make alterations in my outdoor aviary, and would be very grateful for the information.

QUELLE.

BORDER FANCIES AT THE LATE KILSYTH SHOW.

SIR,—I was called in by Mr. Scott to see the bird he has received from the above show, and I think he has made a mistake over its sex. It is not a hen (as stated by Mr. Duncan), but a buff cock, and by all appearances a two-year bird. The cage is of a very peculiar pattern; the wires are all twisted round the standards, whereas in Mr. Scott's cages they are laced with small wire. There is no mistake; he has received both the wrong bird and cage; and as there was no number on the cage when received, he has no clue to its rightful owner. I trust that from the above particulars the party who received Mr. Scott's bird in mistake will know that this has been a case of "exchanging" birds by error of the packer, and see it put right at once.

J. PATTERSON.

PROPOSED SOCIETY FOR FOREST GATE AND DISTRICT.

SIR,—I notice a letter in last week's CAGE BIRDS re the formation of a fanciers' society at Forest Gate. It has occurred to me that there are already too many societies in the East London district, and all within easy distance of Forest Gate. There are Stratford, Ilford, and Walthamstow Fanciers' Associations, and Leyton Cage Bird Society, which was founded because it was felt that a society for cage birds only was much needed in the East London district. It was hoped that the cage bird men would respond to the call and make a good society. Leyton had hardly got established, however, when another society was formed at Poplar, merely a stone's throw away. Is it possible for so many societies to flourish? I am sure any of the above societies would be pleased to welcome any fanciers from Forest Gate, and in my humblo opinion the Fancy would be served better by supporting the existing societies than by forming a new one right in their midst.

ALBERT B. FORSE.

THE ALLEGED STAINED LINNET AT BRISTOL F.A. SHOW.

SIR,—At the late show of the Bristol Fanciers' Association Mr. C. A. House, with (I am given to understand by one who was present) the aid of a local enthusiast, had a suspicion that a Linnet shown by me at this event was stained. I admit it is perhaps a little late to discuss the matter, but the "ever energetic" C.B.U. (like the railway companies) takes a long time to come to a decision, which I did not get until Dec. 31st, 1908. The letter disclosed the fact that I had been found guilty and convicted to three months suspension dating from the first day of September next till the 30th Nov. I strongly appeal to the thousands of your readers to give me a hearing, and help me to quash this most unfair decision. The facts are these: On Nov. 5th I called upon and purchased from a certain fancier a Linnet (the offender) and Yellow Bunting for a good figure; but I couldn't take them with me as they were away at a show. This fancier advised me to let them have a feed on the following morning, and he would send them on later in the day. To cut a long matter short, they arrived here about 5.30 p.m,. and were duly packed, with other birds, and despatched to Leicester show by the 6.36 train. The Linnet got second and the Bunting he, not a very extraordinary result. Through the efforts of that ever-worthy and energetic secretary, Mr. Draper, they arrived back from Leicester at 11 p.m., but were not unpacked till next morning (Sunday). On this day I had two friends with me the whole day, and well-known fanciers. Monday and Tuesday I was in Manchester on business, as usual; this I can prove. On the evening of the second day my birds were despatched for Bristol Show I duly received a prepaid telegram on the Thursday (instead of the Wednesday) giving result, and stating that the Linnet was disqualified. About three weeks after I had a letter from Mr. Maggs confirming it, and about this time I had my bird returned (which had been detained without any notification from anyone) through Mr. Ind. I again heard nothing for some time till I received a letter from Mr. Pope (the chairman, I presume, of the District Committee, C.B.U.), asking for all particulars, and he said he would place them before the committee, and do his utmost for me. I heard nothing from that day till the 31st Dec., when I heard, as stated, from Mr. Lythgoe. I gave Mr. Pope a fully detailed account of the purchase of the bird (exactly as I have placed it before some of the most prominent fanciers in the North of England, including Mr. Bladon and Mr. Lythgoe himself), and each one can but admit it is a very hard case for me. All the years I have been an exhibitor of birds I have never had the breath of suspicion cast upon me, and I have received endless letters from kind friends and sympathisers all wishing me the best of luck in getting myself free from this unjust verdict and suspension. The Bristol Society hold my prize money, and yet I am asked for another ten shillings deposit by the C.B.U. to protest against this unwarrantable decision, after sending to Mr. Pope and his committee a long detailed account of the transaction, giving times of receipt of the birds, etc., also despatch. I will ask your readers one question, that I think will get this answer, "No." I can show railway companies' bills giving time of receipt of the birds by me and also the time despatched to Leicester and witnesses as well. Now, gentlemen, the Linnet took second at Leicester, and had a long list of premier honours to its record before I bought it. Is it at all likely that any sane man would stain it for Bristol show, even had he such an inclination? I say, with hundreds of others, apart from my own case, No!

[Certain sentences have had to be deleted from the above letter, as they contain allegations intended to shift responsibility for the alleged staining on to other shoulders, and such allegations must be made and investigated in the proper quarter.—EDITOR.]

PRIZE MONEY AT ST. ALBANS SHOW.

SIR,—Seeing a letter in your paper of the 26th Dec., complaining of exhibits being returned from St. Albans' Show, I am sorry to say I am worse off than the writer. I made six entries, winning two firsts, one second, two thirds, and vhc., and I have not received one penny prize money. I have written the secretary four times and received a reply once, saying he was sorry, but my prize money would be paid in a day or so; that was two weeks ago. I have written twice since, and received no reply, hence my reason for writing this, as they clearly state in their letter in your issue of the 26th Dec., that the show was a "record" one, and that they hoped to have nothing to mar its success. I cannot see the reason for not paying me my prize-money. I hope they will give the reason in your next issue. A. BROWN.

PRIZE MONEY AT DULWICH O.S. SHOW.

SIR,—I am glad to see that my letter in your issue of the 9th inst. has drawn at least some information, and if the officials of the society were unable to meet their obligations, and required some indulgence from exhibitors, I cannot imagine why they could not have availed themselves of your columns (which I am sure would have been open to them) for the purpose, and asked for it, stating the reasons. I don't think from my experience that exhibitors are at all a bad lot, and I am sure if courteously approached they are usually ready to render what assistance they can to a society in distress; but the responsible persons in this particular society seem to treat applications for debts with contempt, and then, like the proverbial mule, "kick when they are prodded," and whine that they have been badly treated. Mr. Woolhouse does not deny my statement that an official had said all open prize money was paid (and I know that some exhibitors have actually been paid). How he can reconcile the statement that "Exhibitors' confidence will not be misplaced," with the above, and his statement that "We (committee) owe in the open classes about £8 in prize money," I fail to see. It really does strike one that it is not fair to pay some exhibitors and creditors to the exclusion of others of the same class, and Mr. Woolhouse should know that the only "preferential creditor" would be for the rent of the hall. But I suppose where the financial affairs are in such chaos as they appear to be with this society one can expect little else. The amount of prize money in my wife's instance has nothing to do with the question of principle; and if it is so "trivial" might I suggest that the best plan would be to pay it? Surely the hon secs. could have replied to my card without calling a special meeting for the purpose. I am also not aware that when you ask a debtor to pay his account that you should send a stamp for a reply; but perhaps it is the custom over Dulwich way. In reply to Mr. Woolhouse's attempt at sarcasm, I do not seek notoriety through the Fancy Press, but when I do write it is usually with an object, and in gaining that I trust I shall not attain the unenviable pinnacle of notoriety which Mr. Woolhouse attained in his correspondence with Mrs. Reeve at the close of the Dulwich and Peckham show of 1907, anent the treatment of exhibits, etc. Rather than do this I would certainly give up writing in the Fancy Press.

CHAFFINCH-BRAMBLEFINCH HYBRID "WRONG CLASSED" AT THE WELSH NATIONAL SHOW.

SIR,—In reply to "Rex," I should like to say that I had no idea of writing to the Fancy Press about this bird, as I am quite convinced myself that it is a Hybrid. I purchased it from Mr. J. Cooper (Brixton), who informs me that Miss Reeves bred this particular bird, also that the N.B.B. and M.C. presented Miss Reeves with a gold medal for having proved to their satisfaction that she had produced this cross. I should like to ask Mr. Evans if he went to Mr. Robson before wrong classing the bird; also if he took a bird out of the Goldfinch Mule class to Mr. Robson? If Mr. Evans took the bird in the Goldfinch Mule class up to Mr. Robson, why did he not take my bird up also? I intend to show this Chaffinch-Bramblefinch at the Palace, and have no objection to the bird being examined either by Cage Bird Union or the British Bird and Mule Club's representatives.

A. COFFEY.

NEW SOCIETY FOR BARTON-ON-HUMBER.

SIR,—A society has been formed in this town, named the Barton and District Cage Bird Society. The first meeting was held on January 9th, at which about 11 interested persons were present. These all became members, and others have been secured, at time of writing the total membership being 18. The officials elected at the meeting were as follows:—Committee: A. Oldridge (chairman), G. Beach (vice-chairman), H. Chamberlain, W. Sempers, H. Foster, F. Newbown, E. C. Dunn; treasurer, W. Sempers; secretary, G. E. Gastall. Rules of membership have been drawn up, and are supplied to members, together with membership card, for the nominal sum of 1d. Subscription, 6d. per month. Meetings every fourth Thursday. Next meeting February 4th. At time of writing the society has not been able to secure a permanent meeting place. Members will be duly advised of each meeting, with particulars of time and place. The society has decided to adopt CAGE BIRDS as the club paper, and when a definite meeting-place has been arranged all meetings will be advised in CAGE BIRDS The membership of the club is limited to fanciers residing within a six-mile radius of Barton (in Lincolnshire only). This limit may probably be extended at some future time, but it was thought better to restrict the area for the present

THE YORKSHIRE BOWL AT BRISTOL (1907) SHOW.

SIR,—In replying to Mr. G. T. H. Maggs' letter which appeared in CAGE BIRDS Jan. 9th, I intend using the letter "I" instead of the word "we" for two reasons. First, as Mr. Maggs seems to be able to abstract such a quantity of colouring from that particular "I," I wish to furnish him with a good stock. Mr. Maggs commences his letter by saying that Shearn and Owens' letter consisted of half truths and misquotations. Perhaps he means that the one half is truth and the other half is false; if the latter be the correct interpretation, I notice he omits to point out the untrue half. I have gone over the whole of the correspondence and copies, and I find the only misquotation is that particular "I," the letter referred to containing the whole truth and nothing but the truth, barring that particular "I," and I challenge Mr. Maggs to prove any portion of it false except the letter "I." Anyhow, this business is causing me some inconvenience. For instance, when I went to the newsagent for my copy of CAGE BIRDS on Jan. 10th, I failed to get it. I then went to another, and there met the same fate. I trudged on to another, and, to my surprise, he had sold out. He asked me if there was anything special in that week, as they had been "mopped up" so quickly. I replied: "Yes; we expected an article from the pen of some noted writer at Bristol about some bowl." "What bowl is that?" he inquired. I replied, "I don't exactly know, for I have not seen it; but they call it the "Bristol Bowl." Well, I still trudged on to another, and found he, too, had sold out. As I could not buy a copy, I tried the borrowing game, and finally came across a fellow fancier who had been fortunate enough to get a copy, and of course with all haste turned to the correspondence columns, and to my great surprise, after all my trouble, all I discovered was that confounded "I." Now to reply to Mr. Maggs' question, which he puts in this way. "It is difficult to understand why they open the matter in this way, unless it be in search of opportunities to throw mud." Mr. Maggs opened this matter himself. I refer him to the letter he wrote to CAGE BIRDS Oct. 31st, 1908, in which he said that for 17 years they had paid full prize money. Knowing this to be untrue, I waited until after their show, Nov. 14 and 12, then I wrote CAGE BIRDS, Nov. 28th, confuting that statement, saying we had not been paid our prize money. In response to his appeal to us for entries, I sent him a cheque for eight shillings in payment of entry fees and catalogue. Of more scandalous treatment I cannot conceive than that meted out to us as fellow fanciers whose honourable object was to assist them. Now Mr. Maggs challenges us to lay our grievance before the Cage Bird Union. Our principal grievance is defamation of character, and that has to do with the Bristol F.A. and not with the Cage Bird Union, and as to the prize money, I can get that as soon as I choose to make the effort, and when I do I may be able to discover the writer of that letter to CAGE BIRDS, Dec. 28th, 1907, also that the matter was discussed on the 5th of the same month at Bristol. I say to Mr. Maggs as one prominent statesman said to another not long since, that "it takes a wise man to play the fool well." Then again, I notice Mr. Maggs freely admits that he cannot compete with us. I am sure it must be patent to all that it is a difficult matter for one to compete with another whose arguments are backed with facts.

SHEARN AND OWENS.

[Pressure on our space is very severe, and we have had to delete considerable portions of the above letter which do not concern the point at issue. We are doubtful, indeed, whether any purpose can be served by further discussion in the columns of our paper. —EDITOR.]

PRIZE MONEY AT KILMARNOCK O.C.B.S. SHOW.

SIR,—I have waited in the hope that some abler writer than myself would reply to Mr. Miller's letter of the 2nd inst. on the above question, but as none seems disposed to challenge his statements, I venture to show your readers the fallacy of his arguments. By some mysterious method of calculating, Mr. Miller produces figures which are not only misleading, but actually false. The prize-money at Kilmarnock is: 1st, 12s; 2nd, 8s.; 3rd, 4s.; 4th, 2s.; entry fee 2s. When not more than seven in class, half prize-money is paid, as is the almost invariable custom at shows in Scotland (not the exception, as Mr. Miller would have readers believe). He argues that in a class of seven this society pays 7s. in prize-money and pockets 8s. of profit. I cannot conceive how this "genius of finance" managed to arrive at these figures. Half prize-money is 13s. per class, and after deducting 4s. for prize cards, 9s. is paid in cash to exhibitors. The prize cards cost the society 2s. Income, seven entries at 2s., 14s.; expenditure 11s. Where is the 8s. of profit? Then, what about classes with four entries, or those with eight? Do they pay? No, they don't. An exhibition, even at Kilmarnock, is not such a profitable concern as Mr. Miller seems to think. In 1907, the first year of this society's existence, full prize-money was guaranteed in every class. What was the result? Short entries and a consequent big deficit, which was only partially reduced by the generosity of a few enthusiasts. To enable your readers to judge what type of fancier Mr. Miller is, I will give you a sample of his conduct at Kilmarnock Show in 1907. He exhibited a few birds, and being in a hurry to get home, he was preparing to leave the hall with his exhibits about an hour and a-half before the time fixed for closing, when one of the committee politely requested to be allowed to check his numbers. Mr. Miller apparently took this as an insult, and subjected the offending official to a torrent of abuse. He also vowed he would never exhibit at Kilmarnock again, and threatened to denounce their action through the Fancy papers. After his wrath subsided he evidently changed his mind, as he neither wrote to the press, nor did he cease exhibiting at Kilmarnock.

PRIZE MONEY AT THE WELSH NATIONAL SHOW.

SIR,—Allow me a little space in your valuable paper to blow my trumpet at the Welsh National Cage Bird Show for non-payment of money for a bird claimed there. I think it is now time the committee settled with all exhibitors at their show. How do they expect to obtain support in the future by treating exhibitors as they have done?

J. P. DAVIES.

[Messrs J. Summerhill and G. Neal also write us on this subject.—EDITOR.]

SIR,—In reply to Mr. A. Morgan, of Treherbert, in your last issue, on non-payment of his prize money at our last show, we regret to say that we have suffered a heavy loss on this show (very largely duo to a bad gate), and we ask those to whom prize money is due for their kind consideration for a few weeks when the remaining few will be paid.

R. J. TRUSCOTT.

Nests of birds, Poultry, etc., should be regularly sprinkled with KEATING'S POWDER, especially when hens are sitting. Don't forget to do this just previous to the eggs hatching, to destroy the Red Mite. It kills all insects, harmless to everything else.

RARE FEATHERED GOLDFINCHES.

SIR,—Re Goldfinch with a black head, etc., I should like to say that a friend of mine here at Pembroke has got one of the description recently given by Mr. William P. Bell. It is now about two years old, and house moulted. This bird was hatched under a Canary, along with three others of natural colour. The eggs were found in the same nest in a tree a few miles out in the country.

WM. E. SLEE.

THE PRIZE MONEY AT MALVERN SHOW.

SIR,—I am not surprised to see short entries at shows in England and Wales when exhibitors are treated so badly. At the last Malvern Show my Scotch Fancy took first in a class of eight entries, prize-money "guaranteed," but have not yet received one penny. I wrote the secretary several times, but got no reply. I have been exhibiting Canaries the last forty years (19 years in Scotland), but never got so badly treated in bonny Scotland.

J. SUMMERHILL.

SHOW BIRDS & MISSING CLAWS.

SIR,—I was very sorry there were no more replies to my letter signed "Claws," re show birds with missing claws I should like very much to get Mr. C. A. House's opinion on the subject, because if we are going to continue to show birds with missing claws, then in comes that dreaded thing called "faking." For instance, a typical specimen with a twisted or crooked claw can be removed to qualify the cripple to compete. This is my last letter on the subject, and I ask the attention of show secretaries to add a rule to their list as follows: "Birds minus claws, or with disfigured feet in any shape or form, not allowed to compete."

ALEX. BRYDEN.

EARLY BREEDING.

SIR,—On Sunday morning, Jan. 17th, three of our members, Messrs. J. Copeland, H. Taylor, C. Waters, and myself paid a visit to that well-known fancier and mule breeder, Mr. James Miller, the jovial landlord of the Foresters' Arms, High-street, Sunderland, to have a look at his stock. Mr. Miller informed us that on New Year's morning he hatched a nest of four Yorkshires, but unfortunately the sudden change in the weather proved too much for them, and they died at the age of four days, although they were well fed by their parents. Mr. Miller has at the present time several pairs up for breeding, among which we noticed a yellow Norwich hen sitting on four fertile eggs to a Linnet. I thought this might be of some interest to your many readers, it being so early in the season.

W. REID.

THE TYPE OF PRESENT DAY WINNING NORWICH PLAINHEADS.

SIR,—Will you kindly allow me a little space in CAGE BIRDS to again raise the Norwich Plainhead question. I have this show season been to quite a number of cage bird shows, as I usually do during the seasons, and I must say, though I am sorry to have to do so, that I, with scores of other fanciers, am thoroughly disgusted to see what are termed "Norwich Plainheads" winning at the majority of shows. Now, I am not a chronic croaker, so, as a rule, I keep my mouth shut when I see these things, as I find it does no good to make a disturbance at any of the shows by finding fault with the judging. I think the best way is for me to say what I have to say through the fanciers' paper, CAGE BIRDS, so that all fanciers can read and think for themselves. It is a "beater" to me why some of the judges who pretend to know what a Norwich Plainhead should be, put birds in the prize-list that are no more of the Norwich type than I am a nigger. In some cases it is outrageous to see the class of birds that find their way into the prize-list—birds showing more of the Crest-bred characteristics than of the Norwich Plainhead, having flat heads, long, snaky heads, and beetle browed; in fact, any shape but the right one. Look at the size and colour. Of course, we must have size and colour, if all other points are neglected. Oh, yes! we must have the big ones in front at any cost, no matter if they have as much behind them as a duck. Body: this is sometimes long, and of one shape from top to stern, and lacking that round, deep chest, and the essential neck and head properties. Wings and tail: well, I don't think some of the judges notice them at all. I have seen some of these so-called winners carry a pair of wings that cross at the tips considerably, and stand out over the tail half an inch or more. The tails are quite as bad, in some cases being half an inch to three-quarters too long. The feather is oftentimes far too long, and looks more like the wide leafy feather of the Crest-bred. As for the position on the perch, I have noticed some of them carry quite as much at the back of perch as at the front—splendid objects these to be called Norwich! "Oh, but look at the size of the birds." Yes, I am sorry to say that it is size and colour which are winning in most cases, and not type. Why does this kind of bird win, when there are in the same class, maybe, fairly good-sized birds with round, short, well-proportioned bodies, and splendid wing and tail carriage, having head and neck in proportion, and being clean cut away behind, besides having grand quality of feather, which all goes to make up a good Norwich Plainhead? No, birds such as these good ones have to take back seats. And why? Because there are bigger birds in the class, with lots of substance and colour, and nothing else whatever to recommend them. Anybody can breed birds of size, but to breed a good typical Norwich is quite a different thing. And when they are bred and staged some of the judges can't see them—oh, no! not when they are in same class. The question, therefore, is: Who is to blame for all this? I for one am not afraid to say that it is the judges' fault, and theirs alone. Have we not got a standard, and a splendid cut of a Norwich Plainhead drawn up by the Norwich Plainhead Club? But how often do we see a bird approaching this cut winning? I might say, not once in fifty times. No, the Norwich Plainheads are right down the class if you want to see them. So I maintain that so long as the judges give prizes to those nondescripts we shall see Norwich classes filled with trash. At most shows I have been to this season I have heard this complaint over and over again, and not necessarily from "disappointed exhibitors," but from non-exhibitors and fanciers alike. I am well aware that it is hard to please everybody, and it cannot be done; but for Heaven's sake, Mr. Judge, forget size and colour, to a certain extent, of course, and give a little thought to type, as, in my humble opinion, type should come before anything else, as it is the most difficult to obtain. I am as fond of a big one as any fancier living (and have such in my room as stock birds), but I must have something besides size and colour, as these alone are not much to recommend a bird. How is it that some judges describe the Norwich Plainhead "just about perfect," and yet when this same judge goes to officiate at a show he in many cases places the cards to the opposite effect? And at the same time there are birds in the class just about the thing that he describes as good ones, but these are away down in the class. Those big, red hot ones, however, have caught his eye, and he can't pass them. I think the Norwich fanciers had better go in for size and colour, irrespective of type, and cross the word Norwich off the schedule, and then see who can breed and stage the biggest mongrel. In conclusion, allow me to wish all fanciers and readers of CAGE BIRDS a happy and prosperous new year.

VALE OF CONWAY & DIS. F.A.

SIR,—Kindly allow me to announce that the above society now embraces the whole of the five most northern counties of Wales, and with the object of extending the influence of the Association as far as possible, we hope to appoint local representatives in every important centre. Will any fanciers willing to help the Association in their respective districts write to me, when full particulars will be sent?

THE THRUSHES WHICH BRED N A CAGE.

SIR,—I am on the sick list, but I have had a visitor to-night who has already put the plates in frames from your Birthday Number and hung them up; quick work, which shows his opinion of them. We thank you for giving a notice of our Thrushes, and may say that we have a young hand-reared hen Blackbird that we have got into even better condition than the Thrush. She is as steady as a rock, and looks with an approving eye on the cock Thrush as he sings his song to the two hens; so we are going to try for Thrush-Blackbird Hybrids this time, as well as "Thrush and Thrush." My British birds have been out in the back yard night and day, all through the severe weather, and they are all (the cocks) "singing their heads off."

PROPOSED CAGE BIRD SOCIETY FOR THE CITY OF LONDON.

SIR,—I am endeavouring to bring about the formation of a Cage Bird Society for the City of London, as I think the most important city in the world should be represented by such a society. I should be pleased, therefore, if all those members of the Fancy sufficiently interested will arrange to meet me at the under-mentioned address on Wednesday, 27th January, in order that the subject may be fully discussed, and the society brought into being as early in the New Year as possible. As I know there are numerous cage-bird fanciers residing within the City limits, I would ask them especially to do their very best to attend this meeting.

FANCIERS

who have tried FOX'S EGG & BISCUIT all declare that it is the very thing that is wanted. Not only are they convinced of its superiority over food prepared by themselves but are by its economy. With all other prepared foods fanciers invariably add EGG but in the case of FOX'S EGG & BISCUIT it will some be thought advisable to add BISCUIT. The 50% of EGG contained is as rich in nutriment as the eggs you would prepare yourselves. But it is far better because it is perfectly soluble and therefore easily digested. To prepare the food it is only necessary to add a little water and a child could do it. It can be fairly called a way compared to the old method. The great millennium of cage bird feeding has come and every practical man should at least give it a trial.

CRESTED CANARY CLUB MATTERS

SIR,—In reply to a communication received by Mr. Ramsden from Mr. C. Roberts respecting the competition for the Roberts Cup, I am requested by Mr. Ramsden to announce through the Fancy Press that the cup will be competed for at the Crystal Palace Show, as previously, and that a notification of it was sent at the same time as all the other particulars concerning the Crested Canary Club's support. As, however, through your courtesy the support has already appeared, and is printed in the club's rule book, the regretted omission from the schedule of the Crystal Palace Show will not, I hope, affect the competition.

JOHN TYSON.

SIR,—I find on getting my schedule of the coming Palace Show that the Roberts Cup has been overlooked, and does not appear in the same. I wish you would make it known that this cup is in competition at the coming Palace show.

A NEW SOCIETY FOR RUNCORN AND DISTRICT.

SIR,—A well-attended meeting of bird fanciers and those interested in cage birds took place on Jan. 15 in the Temperance Hotel, High-street, Runcorn, for the purpose of considering the advisability of introducing a cage bird society into Runcorn. It was ultimately agreed that the objects of such a society are highly desirable, and straightway certain preliminary business toward its formation was commenced. It was unanimously decided that all fanciers be eligible for membership who reside within a radius of fourteen miles This new and up-to-date society gives a cordial invitation to all interested in the advancement of the interesting hobby. It was resolved that the yearly subscription be 4s. Judging by the attendance at the meeting and the enthusiasm displayed by the assembly, this society promises to be one of the finest in the district. The following officers were elected:—Chairman, Mr. W. H. Cawley; vice-chairman, Mr. J. Guy; treasurer, Mr. E. Peck; secretary, Mr. T. P. Baxter, 103, Greenway-road; and a large committee of exceptional experience in the management of work of this description. At the close of the meeting Mr. Cawley entertained the company to an excellent supper.

T. P. BAXTER, Secretary.

A NEW SOCIETY FOR ARDWICK AND DISTRICT.

SIR,—Kindly allow me, through the columns of your valuable paper, to notify cage bird fanciers that this society will hold its first meeting on Feb. 1st at 8.30 p.m., at the "Blacksmith's Arms," Viaduct-street. Particulars as to membership may be had from me, communications to be addressed to "Blacksmith's Arms," Viaduct-street, Ardwick, Manchester.

ALNWICK AND DISTRICT C.B.S

SIR,—Will you kindly state that all communications in connection with the Alnwick and District Cage Bird Society should now be addressed to Mr. W. A. Broadley, 16, King-street, Alnwick, who has been appointed the new secretary. I am now in nowise connected with the above society, as I reside at Berwick-on-Tweed, my occupation being there at present. I have handed down my stock of Canaries and British birds to my younger brother, F. Rennison.

THE YORKSHIRE C.C. OF IRELAND CHALLENGE CUP.

SIR,—In your issue of last week I observe a letter signed by Jas. Devins (Sligo) re the above, and as he has now admitted he is competing in open champion classes in Ireland, I would like to ask him a few questions, through the medium of CAGE BIRDS, as I believe his replies would be interesting and instructive to young Fanciers. (1) Mr. Devins, did you exhibit in the novice classes at our recent Clapham open show? If so, why as a novice, seeing that there were champion classes provided? (2) Do you consider it honourable for any champion exhibitor to enter and compete against a novice (young in the Fancy) where there are open classes? (3) Is it your candid opinion that such a practice, if allowed, will help to further the interests of the Fancy and promote a greater interest among novice exhibitors? (4) Would it not be only fair that a man guilty of such a practice should be reported to the committee with a view of having his entries at all future shows carefully examined before being accepted? Or should not such a man be disqualified completely? Would such drastic punishment injure or better the Fancy generally?

WILL MULES BREED?

SIR,—I was much interested and delighted to read Miss Martin's letter in CAGE BIRDS, as I have been a convert for some years past to the opinion that it is possible to get fertile eggs from Mules, although personally I have not been able to do so. However, I supplied a personal friend of mine with a number of British birds for her aviary, some three or four years ago. Another friend gave her a dark hen Goldfinch Canary Mule, which was put into the aviary with the Britishers. This young lady soon became very fussy with a cock Linnet, which fussiness he, of course, reciprocated with much warmth, and woe to any other bird that dared attempt to take any liberties with his lady-love. My friend, the owner, called my attention to the fact, and asked me if I thought they would breed if put together in a breeding cage. I said that it was quite probable they might pair, and go through all the ceremonies of breeding, but that the eggs would be unfertile. Of course, I was prejudiced on the question, as I had seen it stated so frequently that it was an absolute impossibility to get fertile eggs from Mules, that in my ignorance I accepted it as an undisputed fact. However, the impossible came to pass in this instance; the hen Mule went to nest, laid four eggs, and sat her usual time, when word was brought me that one of the eggs had actually hatched out. I can assure you I was very soon on the spot. The nest was taken out, and there I saw what I never expected to see—a young bird bred from a cock Linnet and a hen Goldfinch Canary Mule. Although it was only a day old, I offered at once to buy it, but my friend would not accept my offer. This bird lived until it was nearly three weeks old, and then died from neglect by the mother. The wings of the bird were kept and preserved, and I believe my friend has them to this day. Now here comes the strange part of my story; this was the first and only bird my friend had ever bred up to that time. She put them together again the following year, but the Linnet died, and his widow absolutely refused to have anything to do with another bird. I have mentioned these facts to a number of Fanciers, including Mr. Robson, but none of them will accept the statements as facts. All imagine that some trick was played; in fact, Mr. Robson quite pooh-poohed and ridiculed the idea, and would have none of it. And now comes Miss Martin's interesting letter. I wonder what the knowing ones will say in reference to it! We shall see.

CLUB REPORTS.

FALKIRK AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held in Oddfellows' Hall on January 7th, Mr. Robert Dickson (president) presiding. Mr. Robert Hamilton, 28, Union-road, Camelon, was appointed secretary. It was agreed to take motions on alteration of rules to be decided at next meeting.—ROBERT HAMILTON, Sec.

PUDSEY, STANNINGLEY AND DISTRICT O.S.

Annual meeting held on January 6th. The secretary read the financial statement, which showed a balance in hand of £1. Mr. E. Marsh (Pudsey) was elected president; Mr. J. Butler secretary. The society is looking forward with hope to having a successful year, and an increased membership. Three new members were made.—J. BUTLER, sec.

CROOK ORIGINAL F. AND F.S.

General meeting held at the Crown Hotel clubroom on January 6th. Mr. W. J. Bird presided over a good company. The secretary, Mr. A. Bowes, presented the balance-sheet for the past year, which showed a good balance in hand, and was accepted as very satisfactory. The election of officers for the present year resulted as follows:—President, Mr. H. P. Douglas; treasurer, Mr. F. E. Rudkin; auditors, Messrs. A. Bowes and W. Brown; chairman of committee, Mr. F. Brown; vice-chairman, Mr. W. Mason; assistant secretary, Mr. J. Siddle. Mr. W. J. Bird was elected secretary in place of Mr. A. Bowes, who resigned the position. ## SHEFFIELD AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held at the Wentworth Cafe on January 7th, under the presidency of Mr. A. Bradshaw, a good muster of members being present. The chief business was introduced by the secretary, this being an alteration in the method of holding members' shows. The meeting decided that several shows be held during the year in various parts of the city, and that special prizes be given for competition. Points gained at the shows held during the year will count for prizes. The object of the society is to bring the cage birds hobby more before the public, and create an interest and enthusiasm in its doings. Several new members from outlying districts, through the radius extension to 20 miles, were enrolled. A show will be held next meeting night, February 4th, at 8 p.m., for matched pairs for breeding, Messrs. Garnett and Tow having promised to judge.—LINDSAY AND BINGHAM, Secs.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE CAGE BIRD SOCIETY.

Annual meeting, held in Lockhart's Cafe, Grainger Street, on January 7th. Mr. Currah presided over a very large attendance. All the officers of the society were re-elected, with the exception of one or two of the committee, who, having resigned their membership, were not eligible. Messrs. Thomas Chapman, John Currah, jun., Geo. Allinson, and Geo. Ellis were elected in the place of those resigned. The passing of the balance-sheet was deferred until the next meeting. Mr Macpartlin, who we are pleased to say is convalescent again, was unanimously elected Cage Bird Union delegate. It has been decided that our next annual show be held on October 22nd and 23rd, when we hope to go one better than last year. We were instructed to communicate with some popular judges for judging terms. Our chairman gave a very interesting account of the success of some of our members at the Scottish National, one of whom was fortunate in winning the much-coveted Dewar Shield. Several new members were proposed, including Mrs. Irwin-Dees, the esteemed Mayoress of Wallsend-on-Tyne. Members are reminded that the social is fixed for January 28th, when we hope to see a good muster. A vote of thanks to the chairman brought a very pleasant evening to an end.—CURRY AND HUTCHINSON, secretaries.

DULWICH O.S.

Annual general meeting at headquarters, "The Herne," East Dulwich, on January 7th, Mr. G. F. Woolhouse presiding. The hon. secretaries (Messrs. Rogers and Mazzoni) presented a financial statement, and gave a short review of the past year's working. Starting some ten months ago with a membership of just over 20, the society now numbered over 100; 66 only, however, had paid their subscriptions, the remainder only their entrance fees. It was hoped these defaulters would soon clear the books and help the society in the present crisis, for they regretted, owing chiefly to the bad gate at their late annual show, there was a loss of over £20 on the year's working. They had guaranteed full prize-money, although in some classes only five or six entries, and out of 88 classes provided only two were cancelled. They had paid out the whole of the prize-money in the open classes with a few exceptions, and to these they craved indulgence for a few weeks, till several accounts owing the society had been paid and a scheme had been carried out to raise the deficit. The majority of the members had consented to wait. The committee expressed their intentions of fulfilling all their obligations. Rent of the hall, printer's account, and tradesmen had been paid. The advisability of continuing the society was then discussed, and it was unanimously resolved to go ahead. Mr. C. T. Maxwell kindly offered 10s. 6d. to the show fund, and this was augmented by donations from Messrs. Woolhouse, Goodwin, Rogers, Mazzoni. Sprules, Foster and Kent, to the amount of £6 10s., and as the subscriptions for 1909 are now due (several already have paid), it should not be long before the society is in a better financial position. A vote of thanks to the retiring officers was passed. The chairman mentioned that numerous congratulatory letters had been received on their late show, and the promise of future support. The election of officers for 1909 resulted as follows:—President, A. Bonar Law, Esq., M.P.; vice-presidents, Messrs. F. H. Bussey, D. Mabey, W. Morris, Councillors Geo. Scott, and W. Alwin, J. Peacock, C. Pierson, W. T Butt, F. Gain, G. Warley, C. T. Maxwell, W. H Vale; committee, Messrs. G. L. Woolhouse (chairman), P. G. Sprules (vice-chairman), A. E. Rogers, C. L. S. Mazzoni, W R. Wall, J. Wilmot, R. Pocock, R. Bruty. A Rees, W Powles, W. Edmonds, W. Taylor; hon. treasurer, W. Goodwin, Esq.; trustees, Messrs. G. Garlick and J. Fletcher; auditors, Messrs. W. J. Lovesy, C. Aldridge; hon. general secretary, Mr. S. J. Kent, 156, Underhill-road, East Dulwich, S.E.; hon. show secretaries and managers, Messrs. G. F. Woolhouse and A. E. Rogers. At the conclusion of the meeting Mr. C. T. Maxwell was presented with the special prizes he had won at the late show. Pairs show was fixed for Feb. 18th. A vote of thanks to the chairman brought the meeting to a close.—G. F. WOOLHOUSE.

Members' show will be held at headquarters on February 13th, and the schedule for same will be drawn up on February 3rd. The date submitted for our annual show is November 24th and 25th. Will secretaries please note?—W. H. MANLEY, hon. secretary.

CHESTER AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Annual meeting held January 5th, at the Nag's Head Cocoa House. Mr. Wright presided over a good attendance. After the payment of prize-money and the presentation of specials won at the members' show, held December 26th, the hon. secretary stated that owing to ill-health the president, Mr. F. S. Moore, was obliged to vacate the chair. Much regret for this, and many hopes for his restoration to health, were expressed. Mr. Moore has held the chairmanship since the formation of the society, and has been a liberal supporter of the Fancy. The election of officers and committee for the ensuing year resulted in Mr. S. Whitlow being unanimously elected president; Messrs. Crane, J. Jones, Wright, and Lloyd, vice-presidents; H. Stovin, hon. treasurer; and J. Swindley, hon. secretary; with a good working committee of old and young fanciers. It was resolved to extend the radius of membership (owing to repeated applications from various quarters) to the counties of Cheshire, Shropshire, Hereford, Monmouth, and the six counties of North Wales, viz., Flint, Denbigh, Carnarvon, Anglesey, Merioneth and Montgomery.—J. SWINDLEY, hon. secretary.

ABERDEEN O.S.

Annual general meeting held in the Trades Hall Buildings on January 9th, the president (Mr. John Hector) in the chair. The prize-money was paid, and the balance-sheet was read, showing a small balance on the right side. Mr. John Strachan and Mr. Hector made a few remarks on the report, which was adopted, on the motion of Mr. William Allan, seconded by Mr. William Lawrie. The members were enrolled, and the former office-bearers were re-appointed, viz.:—President, Mr. John Hector; vice-president, Mr. William Allan; treasurer, Mr. James Silver; secretary, Mr. John Bryson, 8, Broomhill-road; committee, Messrs. A. Thomson, W. Ewen, A. Anderson, L. Will, W. Lawrie, J Strachan, J. Ellis, J. Loyn, J. Sandison, A. Thomson (Woodside), J. Balfour, G. Mackie, P. Stewart, J. Main, F. Garden. Messrs. J. G. Milne and J. Strachan were re-appointed auditors. Mr. John Strachan gave notice of motion to fix closing time for membership in young section. Professor J. Arthur Thomson (Aberdeen University) has kindly consented to deliver a lecture on "Heredity in Birds" before this society early next month. Fanciers and others should keep this in view.—J. BRYSON, sec.

CAMBRIDGE C.B.S.

Annual business meeting held at "The Forester," Burleigh-street, on January 6th, when Mr Brooks presided. The most important business was the hon. secretary's (Mr. Moore's) report, which proved highly satisfactory. All the shows, confined and open, held during the past year had been well patronised, and the balance at the credit of the club had increased from £13 to £16 18s., and, compared with 9s. four years ago, when the present secretary took office, which reflects the greatest credit on Mr. Moore, and for which he was heartily thanked by the members. The competitions for the various medals offered by the society resulted as follows:—Most points in Canary section: 1 Brooks, 2 W. Linsey; most points in British section: 1 W. Linsey, 2 Lambert and King (tied); novice Canary: 1 King, 2 Hard; introducing most members (presented by Messrs. Doggett and Moore): 1 W. Linsey, 2 Cartwright. It was agreed that the annual dinner take place on February 4th, when the medals will be presented. In regard to the annual open show, the meeting resolved to continue making it a two-days' exhibition, and it will take place in the Corn Exchange on November 10th and 11th. A hearty vote of thanks was accorded the outgoing officers for their successful piloting of the affairs of the society, and the following were appointed for the ensuing year:—President, Capt. Heal; chairman, Mr. Brooks; vice-chairman, Mr. Doggett; hon. secretary and treasurer, Mr. Moore; assistant-secretary, Mr. Gifford; auditors, Messrs. Edwards and Rogers; committee, Messrs. Bye, King, Gawthrop, Stiles, Lambert, Roff, Dean, W. Linsey, and G Linsey.

BELFAST O.S.

The annual meeting of the Belfast O.S. (Belgian and Scotch Fancy) was held on Jan. 9, when the office-bearers for 1909 were elected: President, Mr. Robert Trimble; vice-president, Mr. A. Russell; secretary, Mr. W. Gilbert, 23, Paxton Street, Belfast; treasurer, Mr. J. Ronaldson; committee, Messrs. W. Trimble, W. J. Moreland, Robert Tedford, John Neill, and J. Craig It was unanimously decided that the club meet henceforth on the first Saturday of the month, and that the next meeting be in April. Mr. M. McCain (Portadown) was unanimously elected to membership. Some of the members who also breed Norwich Canaries complained that no classes are given for these. After considering this matter fully from all standpoints, it was passed unanimously that five classes be given for Norwich Plainheads, viz., clear or ticked yellow cocks, ditto buff cocks, ditto yellow hens, ditto buff hens, variegated cock or hen; the prize money is to be equal in all classes. It was also decided that membership be only open to fanciers that are breeders of Scotch Fancy or Belgian Canaries. The hope was expressed that everyone would do their very best to get as many new members as possible. The annual fee is 10s., payable in May; this entitles members to show two birds in each class (about 20 classes are given), and gives them free admission to show at all times, etc. The balance left after paying expenses is divided over all the classes, the first four birds in each class getting equal prize money. The members of the "old club" feel confident that this year's show, which is their 41st annual one, will surpass any held during recent years.—WM. GILBERT, Secretary.

LOWESTOFT AND DIST. C.B.S

Annual general meeting held at headquarters, the Fox and Hounds, London-road, Lowestoft, on January 4th. The chairman (Mr. A. Cooper), vice-chairman (Mr. S. Bagshaw), and the hon. secretary and treasurer (Mr. W. Lang, junr.) were again unanimously elected to fill the chief offices, and most of the old committee were again elected, including the following gentlemen: Messrs. Blackburn, Catchpole, Clarke, Fitt, George, Hart, Hatch, Kirk, Lay, Munford, Rickards, Smith, and Wigg. The balance-sheet for 1908 showed a balance of 1s. 5d. on the right side, after paying all expenses for our annual show, and we hope to do better still this year. It was decided to have a table show at our next monthly meeting for pairs of Norwich Plainheads, Cinnamons, and Crests; three classes for champions and three classes for novices. Mr. Kirk kindly consented to give three medals, one in each section for most points throughout the year at our monthly table shows. Mr. Kirk was accorded a hearty vote of thanks, and in reply said he thought it would do the club good and would also get the members together. Will members who were not at the meeting kindly note that birds must be at the club-room by 6.30 to compete in the pair classes?—W. LANG, Junr., hon. sec.

DULWICH AND PECKHAM C.B.S.

Annual general meeting held January 7th. In the unavoidable absence of the chairman until late in the evening, Mr. E. S. Lugg was elected to the chair. The meeting considered several alterations of rules, the most important being that the annual subscription be 4s., payable half-yearly. A long discussion took place, and an amendment that the annual subscription be 3s. was carried. The following proposition was also carried: "That the election of officers and committee shall be by voting papers, and not as now at the general meeting." It was also decided to add to rules the following: "The membership of this society is open to the United Kingdom." Officers for 1909:—Patron, A. Bonar Law, M.P. It was unanimously agreed to ask Dr. J. E. Sidgwick to become president. Vice-presidents: Messrs. T. Boydon, R. Brownlie, A. E. Crowhurst, G. Dansie, R. Glendenning, D. Mabey, T. Robson, J. H. Harbord. Auditors, Mr. J. S. Matthes and Mr. F. Cole. Solicitor, H. B. Tweed, Esq. The office of treasurer, it was decided, should be held jointly with that of hon. secretary. Committee: Messrs. H. E. Tringham, E. S. Lugg, A. Cunningham, L. J. Richardson, F. Johnson, W. Hodson, J. W. Norris, A. R. Jay, H. S. Stephens. Mr. W. Hodson was elected secretary, but owing to business arrangements was obliged to decline. It was found at this point that it would be impossible to conclude the business that night, and it was decided to adjourn until another evening, date to be announced in Fancy Press. Business for the adjourned meeting will be the election of secretary and assistant secretary. Consideration for alteration of rules, viz., that the committee consist of 12 members instead of 9 as at present; consideration of balance-sheet and financial position of society. It is hoped every member will endeavour to attend.—W. HODSON (hon. secretary, pro tem.).

BRADFORD EAST O.S.

Second annual tea and concert in connection with the distribution of prizes was held on January 5th, at Park Chapel Schools, when about 160 persons sat down to a substantial tea. The musical part of the programme was ably sustained by the following artistes:—Mrs. Wilson Laycock (soprano), Miss Lily Goldsboro (contralto), Mr. Morris Speight (tenor), Mr. John Hill (baritone), Mr. Norman T. Akeroyd (humorous elocutionist), Mr. Rowland Hill (piccolo soloist), Mr. Ernest Wilkinson (humorist), and Miss Alice M. Cruise, accompanist. During the interval Mrs. E. Suddards, of West Bowling, kindly presented the prizes to the members who had been successful in winning the gold medals, etc., during the past year at the five members' shows. The following were the winners in the champion section:—J. Farrar, G. White, W. Stables, H. Hill, F. Gelder, G. R. Rushworth, L. Briggs, W. Bleazard, and W. Blakey; in the novice section, Messrs. J. Northrop, J. Crowther, W. Laycock, O. Priestley, E. Dinsdale, W. Greenwood, H. Peacock, S. Warner, and A. Busfield; in the extra novice section, Messrs. S. Hudson and W. Nettleton. The secretary then gave his report on the year's progress, and thanked the officials most cordially for the splendid support they had given him. From a membership of 53 at the time of the last annual tea, the society had now a total of 67 members—not a bad performance for a society in its second year. The total number of birds shown at the five shows for the specials was 530, being an average of 106 per show. And the last show stands as a record for the society, when 172 birds were staged. The attendance at the meetings throughout the year averaged about 30 per meeting, and 144 persons had taken part in three rambles that had been participated in during the summer months. The society is fortunate in possessing as president Mr. E. Suddards, who has given of his best for the welfare of the society, and much of the success which has been so far accomplished is due to the services he has rendered; and so long as he retains his position at the head of affairs, so long will the society flourish and be of great benefit to its members. The financial statement was very gratifying, and we start the year with a nice little balance in hand. This has been a year of heavy expenditure, but we have come through with a balance on the right side, and are therefore hopeful with regard to the future. Mr. Suddards proposed a vote of thanks to the trustees for their kindness in lending the schools, and thanked them most heartily for their ready help on past occasions. Mr. G. White seconded, and it was carried. Mr. Wade, one of the trustees, responded in a few well-chosen remarks. The programme was then continued with the utmost enthusiasm. This concert will rank as one of the best things accomplished by the society so far, the talent being far above the average. Mr. E. Haley, one of the trustees, officiated as chairman in a very efficient manner.—H. HILL, secretary.

DUDLEY.

The second annual show of the Dudley and Dist. C.B.S. was held on Jan. 20 and 21, in the Temperance Hall. The entry was a fairly large one, and some real good birds were staged. Yorkshires and Norwich came up strongly, and competition in almost every class was keen. The secretaries, Messrs. Leech, Mullett, and Bell, supported by a strong and capable committee, among whom we noticed Messrs. Hingley, Weeks, Capewell, Fallows, Raybould and others, had everything well in hand; cards, too, were up immediately the classes were judged. We hope to hear the show was a financial success; the schedule certainly deserves it. Mr. Robson judged all classes except Rollers, which were taken by Mr. Whittaker. The management was worthy of high praise.

DISS.

The Diss and Dist. C.B.F.S. held their fifth annual open show in the Corn Hall on January 12th. The hall is A1, and makes a capital place in which to hold a show of cage birds, having grand light. The secretaries, Messrs. H. J. Gooderham and W. Burrows, together with their committee (all good and true fanciers), deserve praise from every exhibitor for the splendid way in which all the arrangements were carried out. Birds were watered directly after judging, and the general routine work was got through as if by machinery. Entries were much the same as last year's, but quality was far in advance of anything seen at Diss before. The open Norwich classes were especially good, and contained some well-known winners. The Mule or Hybrid class was a grand one, containing a Canary-Bullfie and several very lightly-marked Goldie Mules and a nice Goldie-Bullfie. The Goldfinch class, too, was a treat to see. The local classes were an improvement on last year's, some very typical birds putting in an appearance. The show was opened by Col. E. R. Kerrison, C.M.G., who wished the society success; a vote of thanks was afterwards passed to him. Mr. J. Robson judged. Diss fanciers are worthy of a great deal more support than was accorded them this year, and we hope a much better entry will be made another year. Mr. Gooderham is a hard worker, and most happy when he can help someone out of a difficulty.

LINGFIELD.

Only six classes were provided for Cage-birds at this show which was held in the Victoria Memorial Hall on January 20th. As only in the event of eight entries in a class was full prize money to be paid, the entry doubtless suffered, as fanciers are not enamoured with the sliding scale. A few very nice exhibits put in an appearance, and all the exhibits were ably looked after by the committee, who had the arrangements well in hand. Mr. J. Stone, the secretary, is a most able and courteous officer, and under his direction everything passed off well. Mr. C. A. House judged.

GREEN CANARY ASSOCIATION (LIVERPOOL).

The annual old show of this association was held in the Caledonian Schools, Oldham-street, Renshaw-street, Liverpool, on January 16th. The entry totalled up something like 450 birds, and is a record one for a club show. There were 16 Yorkshire Green classes, and 16 for Norwich Greens. There were also eight other Yorkshire classes and six Norwich, besides many others. There were four champion Yorks. Green classes, and four champion Norwich Green classes, in which points scored count for cups, medals, cash, and other specials throughout the season, and are governed by the season's competition rules. Very numerous were the other specials given, and these created keen competition. An extraordinary list of donors of special prizes was issued on the schedule, and all the leading Green Canary Club men's names appear in the list. Other generous donors came forward, notably the president, who gave a prize of 20s. for the best Green Canary in show, bred by the exhibitor. This was hotly contested for, and Mr. Clayton's yell. Green cock, 2nd in its class, and Mr. R. Davies's yell. Green Norwich, 2nd in its class, were the two nominated birds left in. Mr. Greaves "stuck" for the Yorkshire, and Mr. Houlton very strongly favoured the Norwich. A referee was called in, and he leaned to the Yorkshire which got the award. Both are grand birds, and found many admirers and supporters. The champion Yorkshire classes were not quite so heavy as the champion Norwich, there being 58 in the four Yorks. classes, and 80 in the four Nor classes. The type, colour and quality of most of them were excellent, and competition ruled very keen indeed. Taken on the whole, the show was a capital one. Fanciers were present from long distances, and right well were they repaid for their journey. Mr. Greaves judged the Yorkshires, A.O.V., and Selling classes, and Mr. Chas. Houlton the Norwich, Borders, Gift, Hybrids, and British bird classes. In some cases earlier champions of the season took a back seat, some being off condition, and here and there perhaps one missed, or (through the very cold day) with their backs up a bit. The show was well managed, and the work was got through in good time. All day long the room was full, and all the time presented a very animated appearance. The show can only be pronounced a great success. The officials were a capital lot. The chairman is Mr. F. Handley, the vice-chairman Mr. W. Hales, and the treasurer Mr. J. H. Isaac. The committee consists of such practical fanciers as Messrs. W. Thompson, V. H. Deacon, R. Bratherton (the assistant-secretary), A. E. Doughty, T. Ryno, T. Rowlands, and R. Davies. Mr. S. Hadwin is the secretary, and he is to be heartily congratulated on the success by which his efforts were rewarded. He was, and always is, courteous and obliging, and is in every way suited to his position as secretary.

PROVINCIAL ROLLER C.C.

First annual contest held on Jan. 15 and 16, at the Coal Exchange, Market Place, Manchester. It was the first of its kind ever held in that city, and it was a great success in every way. In the first place there was a record entry of 150, which is, we believe, the largest number of this variety ever entered at one show. The hall was an ideal one for Rollers, and young and old fanciers alike turned up from Worksop, Staffordshire, Liverpool, Wakefield, Leeds, and the surrounding towns, and satisfaction ruled supreme, all over the show. As usual, the bulk of the work fell to but a few hands, but Mr. W. Whittaker, the secretary, with the never tiring help of Mr. Percival and his two sons, everything was done in good time. Some very good birds were staged, some undoubtedly the best bred in England, including the winners at the recent Horticultural Hall show; some recent gold medal winners in Germany were also present; but no doubt their travelling affected their song. However, they did not come up to some of their Lancashire rivals. Messrs. J. Lyons, A. Foulds and J. Burton judged, all three agreeing as to the value, etc., of each bird's song. This is a system which has its drawbacks, involving talking, etc., about one bird while another one is singing all through. Still, in every case, with the exception of one, we did not hear of any fault being found after their long and tiring work in arriving at their decisions, the exception being the winner in the champion class. The judges did their best, but how this bird got through without being penalised it is hard to say. Of course, opinions differ, but your reporter judged the bird several times over along with other prominent fanciers, and made him out to sing certain faulty tours at that time.

SUTTON-IN-ASHFIELD.

Annual show of the Sutton-in-Ashfield District Society, held January 16th, at the "Railway Inn," proved a splendid success. Mr. J. ## THURSO.

Twentieth annual show of the Thurso O.S. was held in the Drill Hall, on December 23rd, when there was a grand display of exhibits, many of which were sent long distances. The weather was all that could be desired, the show day being bright and sunny. The indefatigable secretary, Mr. J. D. Millikin, had everything arranged in excellent order. The judges performed their duties in a manner that reflected credit on themselves, and left little room for criticism. There was a considerable increase in the entries of cage birds, and in the more important classes of Canaries; it may be mentioned that Scotch Fancies were really a good show, some grand birds being found amongst them. This was very cheering, for, unfortunately, this class has had very little competition for the past few years. Norwich breeders, however, were set more upon their mettle; competition was very keen, and the awards were well divided. Border Fancies were also strong, and competition for the money tickets very keen, some of the Edinburgh winners lifting premier honours. Yorkshires were also a very good class. Mr. Anderson (Forres) judged.

BATHGATE.

Annual show held on Jan. 16, when it proved a record success, both as regards the number of entries and of visitors. This show is acquiring the reputation of being the British bird Palace show of Scotland, and after this year's splendid collection the executive felt proud of their efforts. Many well-known exhibits were staged. Norwich, Crests, and Crest-breds were a sweet collection, although the numbers might perhaps have been larger; the quality, however, was high, competition throughout the classes being very keen, and in many cases just a reversal of former judgments. The Plainheads were a large collection, some grand ones being staged in marvellous bloom. These varieties were carefully handled by Mr. Sloan (Glasgow), and his awards were well received. Borders were a good feature, a really grand and magnificent lot being forward. The honours were well distributed, and the judge, Mr. G. Hislop, was happy in his selection of the winners. He also judged the Yorkshires, which proved a good addition to an already attractive programme. British birds followed, and such a collection has seldom been gathered together in any town. Bathgate are the pioneers of the Greenfinch, and to-day they allotted no less than four classes to their favourites, and it was pleasing to see such a crowd of them. One would have thought from past experience fanciers would not send, as so many champions were already there. But, no; the classes comprised good ones from all over the country, and competition was exceedingly keen. The hen class was a stinger, many hot ones being staged. All the other classes were keenly contested, and the judges, Messrs. J. Brown and S. Ward, had a very difficult task indeed. Colour seemed to predominate in many of the exhibits, and Mr. Brown found it necessary to put several of the birds to the test. A certain well-known champion Greenfinch was among these, but after a careful test the judge was unable to remove anything and awarded it 1st in its class. A well-known winning Chaffinch was also among them, and after another careful test was found "all right" (as one of the partners jokingly remarked: "We still have the receipt in the dye-works"), and it stood 2nd in its class to a grand Bramble, which we heard has only been caged eight weeks and is a marvel for size and colour. The judge, however, discovered alleged colouring matter on a Bullfinch, a well-known winner, and found it necessary to debar it from competition. Alleged colouring matter was also found on a Linnet, and this bird met a similar penalty. The judge fearlessly tested any bird he had doubts of, and satisfied himself as to their colour. Taken all over, the British birds were an object lesson, all species being on view—Buntings galore; Softbills, some of the best living; while hens of the various species were prominent. Mules were the finest ever seen in Bathgate, some gems being staged, while the foreign Goldfinches were a good show, though the Bullfinches were down a shade. Mr. J. Brown (Edinburgh) took the even numbers, and Mr. Sam Ward (Glasgow) the odd numbers here. The show was held as usual in the Corn Exchange, which since last year has undergone a transformation, being now all newly decorated and fitted with hot-water pipes throughout, which kept the hall very comfortable. It needed it to-day, as we had one of the heaviest snowfalls of this season in the morning. Mr. Bald was at the helm, and no comments from us could heighten the esteem in which he is held by the Bathgate committee. Quiet and unassuming he is, but always "there" and obliging. He was ably assisted by Mr. M. Bald, and the pair were happy. The committee are all fanciers, true as steel, and work harmoniously together.

The special winners were as follows:—Bald Cup, for most points in show, Messrs. Livingstone and Sharp; runners-up, Messrs. Craig and Bald (equal); most points, Nor., Mr. J. Reid: Borders, Mr. Craig; Yorks., Mr. Walsh; Mules, Messrs. Jackson and Bond: Brit., Messrs. Livingstone and Sharp; runner-up, Mr. R. Bald.

SHIELDS AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

The first of our table shows was held at Gregg's Cafe on Jan. 13. There were five classes. Entries did not come up quite as well as we expected, although some good birds were staged; many of our members did not exhibit probably owing to the climatic conditions prevailing at the time. Mr. John Gilhespy (Gateshead) judged the Yorkshires, Linnets, and A.O.S. British birds, and Mr. W. L. Smith the remainder. A lively argument ensued in regard to some of the awards.

MORLEY AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Last show of the season held on Jan. 2nd, when about 60 birds were staged. There was a good attendance of the public. I am glad to report that all our shows have been successful, and I believe that we could make an open show pay its way; the interest shown in the members' exhibitions has been great. We have 31 members on the roll, and a few more will join at next meeting. The chief interest of this event was in the British bird class, where about a dozen birds were staged. Mr. J. E. Pyrah won the 1st prize, value 20s., and Mr. W. Spence won the 2nd for most points gained throughout the season. Mr. T. Bentley judged, and gave every satisfaction.

Some very Interesting Answers to some Interesting Questions.

QUESTION 1.—WHICH IS THE BEST BREED OF CANARY FOR THE BEGINNER —AND WHY?

We append a selection from the replies received. It is interesting to note that the majority of the writers plump for the Border as the beginner's best bird, though the Norwich is but half-a-dozen votes behind it.

THREE POINTS.

The Norwich—because it's hardy, prolific, and finds better classification at local shows.—G. LAWRENCE (Halstead).

THE SWEET-VOICED HARTZ.

Undoubtedly the best variety of Canary for the beginner is the Hartz, for these reasons. They are the cheapest breed to gain experience with, are very prolific, don't need large cages, and will always find a ready market as singing birds.—J. BROXUP ((Burnley).

THE GOOD POINTS.

The Norwich Plainhead, because it is easy to understand the good points.—J. PEDDER (Luton).

DIRT PROOF.

Green Norwich, because it is the heartiest, and the most natural in shape, colour, size, and general appearance of the original, and will consequently inherit the most natural propensities. Does not show the dirt, and can be kept nice with the minimum of trouble.—W. MOORELEY (Liverpool).

PRETTY AND POPULAR.

Of all the varieties of Canaries I consider the pretty and now popular little Border to be the best variety for a beginner to commence with. Why? Because really good, high-class stock can be obtained, capable of producing winners of the best order, at a very moderate price and within the reach of all. He should procure two pairs from a reliable breeder, having them on approval, and if he had a fancier in his neighbourhood who would give him a little advice, so much the better. The probable outlay would be about 50s. Specimens of this variety are very active, smart, stylish, and exceedingly taking in appearance, and therefore are sure to take the judge's eye even in the A.O.V. class at shows, where special classes are not provided. Nothing creates so much enthusiasm as a little success in this respect to a beginner. They are hardy and prolific breeders, and last, but by no means the least, the beginner would not be bothered with that troublesome and expensive experience, viz., colour-feeding.—JAMES TOTTLE (Frome).

THE LITTLE GEMS.

Undoubtedly these little "gems," known as Border Fancies, are far and away the best variety for the beginner. Because, from their general smartness they are a most attractive variety of Canary. Full of action and vivacity, they fascinate one with their jaunty ways. They are hardy birds, prolific layers, and excellent breeders, a most important item for a novice. The various colours of Borders are many and varied, and whether the novice means to produce show specimens or simply to breed them as a hobby, Borders in all their various colours, are the surest, easiest, and best breed of Canary for the novice.—W. M. THOMSON (Moffat).

THE LANCASHIRE SUPPORTED.

I should think that the Lancashire will rank amongst the best, providing that the breeder gets his birds from a good strain and uses his judgment a little in breeding by pairing suitable birds. The Lancashire is one of the best birds to see, especially Plainhead hens, as they are much used for muling purposes. They are, I think, one of the best birds to keep, and one of the hardiest.—WM. ADAMS. Rochdale.

JOHN BULL.

The Norwich Canary: reasonable in price, certain and prolific breeder, vigorous in constitution and song—the typical English bird.—F. W. LANE (Belfast).

THE "COMMON" GERMAN.

Commence with one or two pairs of Common Germans. These cost little, are prolific breeders, and seldom fail to rear their progeny. Encouragement thus gained, the necessary foundation is laid to stimulate the would-be fancier to further action. Being good songsters, there is usually a ready sale for the offspring, the result of which should enable the novice to start another season with any variety he may fancy.—S. AYSCOUGH (West Hartlepool).

THE SCOTCH FANCY.

The Scotch Fancy rears more than any other variety I have tried. Hardy, if not used to heat; good songster; above average of most varieties as feeders. Rarely, if ever, plucks young; commands a good price; is a first-class bird no judge can pass in exhibition. Commands admiration from beginner or experienced.—WM. HUNTER (Wishaw).

QUESTION 2.— SHOULD LEGITIMATE "PREPARATION FOR SHOW" INCLUDE THE REMOVAL OF A FEW OBJECTIONABLE FEATHERS?

"AN EYE FOR AN EYE."

I think the best punishment for any person removing a few objectionable feathers is to remove a few of his objectionable fingers. If we can win let us win by fairness, not by faking.—J. BROXUP (Burnley).

A DECIDED NO.

Legitimate preparation should not include the removal of even one objectionable feather from the mere fact of its being not a means of enhancing that which already exists, but materially altering with fraudulent intentions the true character and qualities of a bird. Dishonesty can never be legitimate, and is not recognised by either moral or social laws.—EDWARD MILNE (Blairgowrie).

IS IT TRUE?

Yes, it should, for the very weighty reason that "when you're in Rome, you must do as the Romans do."—R. ROBERTSON (Newtown, St. Boswells).

QUALIFIED.

I think legitimate preparations for show should not include the removal of any objectionable feathers, especially if the owner is trying to sell them, because it is deceiving both judge and buyer.—F. WHITING (Mitcham).

BY THE C.B.U.

No; it is fraudulent practice, and should be dealt with by C.B.U.—K. KINGSWILL (Norwich).

HOW MANY?

Decidedly not; a few might mean anything from three or four up to as many hundreds. A few would be what the operator thought the bird required.—WM. HUNTER (Wishaw).

SOME EXCEPTIONS.

Yes; excepting flight and tail feathers.—G. LAWRENCE (Halstead).

MOST CERTAINLY.

Most certainly, especially if it be a few broken in its tail, which, of course, require five weeks to grow again.—WM. COWARD (Barrow-in-Furness).

BUT DON'T DECEIVE THE JUDGE.

Yes, certainly, if by so doing a bird is brought nearer perfection, and it is done honestly and not immediately preceding a show to deceive the judge, because it is necessary to show a bird at its best to be successful.—H. C. HOLMES (Liphook).

THE BEGINNER MUST LEARN.

Yes; in my opinion the removal of a few objectionable feathers is quite legitimate. The only drawback, to my mind, is that the new beginner is left behind the old hand on the show bench, all other points being equal.—A. RICHARDSON (York).

AVOID TEMPTATION.

Certainly not. The removal of feathers is faking, just as much as the painting of feathers, and faking is tantamount to fraud, and therefore should not be allowed. In my opinion a bird should be staged with all its feathers intact, so that if it should be claimed, the person who claimed it could show it again without the risk of its being disqualified, on the one hand, and without having the temptation thrust upon him to fake the birds himself, on the other.—WM. REID (Sunderland).

QUESTION 3.—IS IT DESIRABLE THAT EXHIBITION BRITISH BIRDS SHOULD BE COLOUR-FED?

DULLS THE COLOUR.

No. It has a tendency to dull the colour instead of brightening it, which is so essential for exhibition British birds. There is no beating the natural (outside) feed given in season.—W. WILLIAMS (Ruabon).

ENSURES A QUICKER, BETTER MOULT.

It is quite desirable and necessary that British birds should have a little colour-food, but only tasteless pepper should be used, as hot pepper alters the plumage, instead of improving it like tasteless does. I also think colour-food ensures a quicker and better moult, and is also better for fanciers who live in the towns and can't get the natural foods.—W. COOPER (Matlock).

AN AID.

Excepting a bird be of extra good natural colour it is necessary to colour-feed to compete successfully; but it should not be overdone. A bird so treated might get "in the tickets," whereas it would be passed as failing in colour if shown naturally.—H. C. HOLMES (Liphook).

DRASTIC.

No. Any exhibitor colour-feeding British birds, if an alien should be fumigated and deported, if a Britisher, cautioned.—JOHN NIGHTINGALE (Folkestone).

NEITHER TIME NOR MONEY.

Plenty of working men have not the time, nor can they afford to go in for colour-feeding.—DAVID BROWN (Ayr).

IS IT TRUE?

At present expert colour-feeders sweep the deck.—A. T. CHARLWOOD (Evesham).

A BIG DISTINCTION.

Yes; but not by scientific food, but by their natural food.—WM. ASTBURY (St. Helen's).

A DECIDED YES.

Yes, provided the schedule does not prohibit. We want the handsomest and best on the show bench to be in the prizes. A well-fed specimen is a standing witness to the extra care and regard bestowed upon it during the moult by its ambitious owner, and if the judge considers its beauty superior to others in consequence, it ought to receive additional points according to the extent of the improvement. This view acknowledges both the skill of the exhibitor and the outstanding merit of the exhibit.—GEORGE HARRIS (Kenley).

A WOBBLE.

No; I think not, as nothing beats a good natural moult without colour-food—unless it improves the colour of the Thrush a little.—W. BROOKSBANK (Goole).

ON THE WHOLE.

On the whole colour-food may be regarded as an undesirable item in the larder of the British bird fancier. (1) Because few of our resident birds are improved by its use, and of those which may be improved by such treatment, the Linnet, Greenfinch, and, perhaps, Redpoll, form the best examples, their naturally sombre plumage being heightened and intensified by such colouring agents. (2) In birds of the Goldfinch or Bullfinch class the exquisite blending of colour and markings is utterly destroyed by such colouring matter.—A. SUTHERLAND GRANT (Kirkcudbright).

HARD HITS.

A British bird is best without being colour-fed. Its natural colour is very hard to improve on. It goes very much against a bird's taste to partake, and by this I know it proves injurious to its health. Many judges ignore fed birds when they find a better bird unfed, which goes to show that feeding is not over popular.—R. GARDNER (Ormskirk).

GO TO NATURE.

It is undesirable to feed with manufactured colour-food, though it is beneficial and admissable to feed with natural flowers and herbs, to obtain the full wild colour of plumage.—W. MOOREBY (Liverpool).

QUESTION 4.—WHICH IS BEST, AN OUTDOOR OR AN INDOOR BIRDROOM—AND WHY?

BAR THIEVES.

An outdoor aviary is best providing it is cosy and dry, and no thieves come around.—F. WHITING (Mitcham).

SETTLED.

I prefer an outdoor structure because my wife does.—J. S. COOPER (Matlock).

A WELSH OPINION.

An indoor bird-room, because you have your birds at your command; they are linked to your house, therefore linked to yourself. Should anything occur in your bird-room you are then more likely to notice it.—J. ROGERS (Afonwen).

ALL THE VIRTUES.

I myself prefer an outdoor bird-room, as I am quite certain it is better, more natural, and healthier for the bird. I have never met with birds suffering from asthma, sneezing, etc., nor those stuck in the moult, in outside aviaries. They can be protected better from vermin (mice, etc.), while redmite and the grey louse are unknown outside. The aviary can be cleaned and generally managed much better outside than in, and moulting will be more thoroughly and quickly accomplished.—A. WILKINSON (Colne).

A PLUMPER FOR INDOORS.

Indoors is far more comfortable from every point of view. An evener temperature can be maintained, smoke and dirt can be easier defied, and a supply of fresh air readily admitted free from draughts.—R. ROBERTSON (Newtown, St. Boswell's).

LEAVE IT TO YOUR PARTNER.

It all depends whether your wife is as fond of the birds as you are yourself. If she is, pick the best room in the house. If not, the best bird-room is outside. Still, inside is undoubtedly the best, for you get a most even temperature, and as a rule it is handier.—A. RICHARDSON (York).

DEPENDS ON THE BIRDS.

It depends what class of bird one fancies. If Crests, in my opinion an indoor room, with window south, is best, if possible for one to have it. Then the birds gets plenty of sun. But for all other Canaries I prefer the outdoor aviaries.—G. M. DAVEY (Plymouth).

MUCH SOUGHT AFTER.

Outdoor bird-rooms are the best; more natural for the birds, and generally more convenient for their owners. Birds that are bred outdoors are hardier and stronger than those bred indoors. There is always a good demand for coldroom bred stock.—A. T. CHARLWOOD (Evesham).

FREEZING.

An outdoor bird-room for birds of warm climates is barbarous treatment. Even English birds with the limited exercise must be numbed in hard frost, and advertisers who "boom" their birds as "out all last winter" should be "hardened" by similar means.—JOHN NIGHTINGALE (Folkestone).

WILD BIRD LIFE.

Birds on the Uplands.

Occasionally during the winter months we get a day almost Spring-like in its atmospheric conditions. The ground is fairly dry, the west wind is mild yet bracing, and the winter sunshine is strong enough to brighten the landscape and give a good light for observations. On such days as these one should get out, if possible, and spend an hour or two upon the uplands and open downs. There has been recently quite a large migration of Skylarks into Surrey districts. These birds mostly frequent the open fields near the higher ground, where they evidently find food plentiful on the uncovered land, for only the tender blades of the Winter-sown corn is showing. We may presume that seeds and insects form the chief food of these splendid songsters. In some places they crowd quite thickly. Their great numbers are more apparent when properly disturbed; they fly up in all directions settling again anywhere, not in solid flocks, as do some of the smaller species of birds. Sparrows are, of course, as numerous as ever, some of the gatherings consisting of several hundreds. They are suspicious and fidgetty, taking wing upon the very slightest sign of danger. It is at this season of the year that one can get some faint idea of the numbers of these birds which exist; they are undoubtedly the most common birds we have, as the Greenfinch is the commonest of the song birds. A small flock of these were sitting upon the footpath and grassy bank, perfectly sheltered from the wind, sunning themselves with evident enjoyment. Occasionally one or other would take wing, either to shift its position, or through being disturbed by a neighbour. At such times they formed a most pleasing picture, the sunlight upon the group, brightening their natural colouring, the light glinting through the outstretched wings with charming effect, looking so delicate and gossamer-like, that they appeared hardly substantial enough to carry the somewhat bulky body. Common as the Greenbird is, he is a beautiful fellow. He lacks the rich colours of the more showy Finches, yet his plumage has delicate contrasts, most charming when seen under certain conditions. No matter how numerous these birds are, they are never in very big flocks; a score or so is the usual gathering. Further on, where the ploughs are at work, a cock pied Wagtail is calling, while he runs nimbly over the rough ground. He looks clean and sprightly, and is evidently an old bird by his size and density of markings. A solitary hen Stonechat is foraging with him, with the usual suspicious habit of the Chats. She appears somewhat restless under observation. As the day draws to a close the sky is alive with feathered creatures, seeking the woods for shelter and repose, and a sleepy Robin bobs "good night" to us from the thicket near the farmhouse.

Escaped Cage Birds.

Many wild caught (?) rare birds are undoubtedly escaped pets. This must have been so in the case of a Ringed Parrakeet recently caught in Essex.

A Huge Flock.

A correspondent in a contemporary estimated a flock of Starlings to cover 150 yards by 50 wide. Allowing one bird for each square foot of ground, this works out at 67,500 birds.

The Acrobatic Redpoll.

Now is the time when one can watch the flocks of Lesser Redpolls. They are the happiest, merriest, little creatures imaginable, always on the move, working away in the trees in all sorts of positions, and keeping up a continual twitter. No doubt their numbers are considerably increased by migrants from the Continent, for although a few pairs breed here in the more northern parts of the country, they do not increase in numbers sufficiently to account for the flocks seen at this time of the year.

Birds' Sight at Twilight.

There was an interesting letter in "The Scotsman" recently from a bird-lover about the sight of birds in the twilight. He gave several instances of the wild ones allowing him to approach quite closely; even the shy and wary birds. At sunset one can walk into the shrubbery and watch the Blackbirds and Thrushes within a few feet of them, without their appearing to be aware of anyone being near; this is providing, of course, the intruder remains perfectly quiet. Possibly they get tired and sleepy, and it this deadening of the senses which appears to make them oblivious to danger.

AMONG SO MANY

advertisements it must be difficult for a would-be purchaser to select who he considers to be the most likely man to give him best value for money. From those people all I ask is a perusal of the unsolicited testimonials given below, and also those published by me week after week for years upon years past. These letters are from delighted customers of mine who, apart from business transactions, are utter strangers to me, and full name and address is given so that sceptical persons can make any inquiry they think proper, and I offer £50 to any person that can prove that I have ever, either directly or indirectly solicited a testimonial from them, or ever paid a penny piece for one. I claim to be the largest retailer of Roller Canaries in United Kingdom, and only importer of the Leipzic strain of "Webers." At present time I have over one thousand Rollers in stock, all in full song, day and gaslight, with long hollow and double rolls, sweet, silvery trills, soft roulades, waterbubble runs, Nightingale, jug-jug, bell, harp, and flute notes, etc., etc., and all guaranteed entirely free from Titlark or any other harsh notes whatever price, 6/6 and 7/6 each. Premier Bandmasters, which excel in the deep, bass rolls and hollow bell rolls, 10/- and 12/6 each. Roller hens, 2/6 each, 4/6 couple. Also a fresh consignment of pure Seifert contest Rollers, in full song, price 15/-, 17/6, and 21/- each. Seifert hens, guaranteed exactly same strain, 3/- and 4/- each. These Seiferts are exceptionally low and mellow in tone, and song is like a cascade of ever-flowing melody. Also in stock grand lot of loud, free singing Hartz cocks, all real ceiling lifters, in full song day and gaslight, cocks, 4/6 each, seven for 28/-; Hartz hens 2/- each or 3/- couple. Every bird is sent on full week's trial on receipt of cash or CAGE BIRDS deposit system, and money fully refunded if your every expectation is not realised. All safely and warmly packed in special travelling cages, with seed and water for 48 hours free of extra cost, and no matter how cold the weather, or long the journey, I take all risk during the whole time. The following letters:—"29, Clifford-road, West Stanley. January 12th. Sir,—Roller I got from you for my friend is quite a champion. He was singing five minutes after being unpacked, and is quite a treat to hear. The two I had for myself are also singing lovely. Please send me a Hartz cock. Yours, Wm. Roe." On January 18th, Mr. Roe writes: "Sir Received Hartz cock safely, and am highly satisfied." "49, Pimlott-st., Longsight, Manchester. January 9th. Sir,—Thanks for prompt attention and satisfactory way you have served me. I think anyone wanting a Roller would not hold back if they could see my bird. Yours, F. Higgins." "4, Canal-terrace, Glasgow Dock, Lancaster, January 17th. Sir,—Have instructed Editor to pay you for Roller Canary. He is a very good bird, and I am sure no better value can be got for money. Yours, J. Robinson." "King-st., Melton Mowbray. January 18th. Sir,—Received Hartz cock with thanks. It is even better than the last I got. Yours, W. Jackson." "Blairgowrie, Scotland. January 18th. Sir,—Bird arrived in good health, and started to sing. I am well pleased with it. Yours, T. Brough." "Cowdenheath, Fife. January 18th. Sir,— Received Leipzic Roller safe, and am glad to say am delighted with it. He is a grand songster. Yours, Wm. Cooper." "156, Bede Burn-road, Jarrow. January 18th. Sir,—I am delighted with the Seifert Roller purchased from you. Of course, I knew (having dealt with you before) that it would be up to the mark. Rest assured that when wanting another I shall not go past you. Yours, J. Young." "Harness Stores, Byfleet. January 16th. Sir,—Bandmaster arrived at 12.55, was singing at 1.5, and at 2 o'clock I had sold him to a friend. Please send another as before. Thanking you for prompt attention and straightforward dealings. Yours, F. Eyes." "New-street, Chasetown, near Walsall. January 16th. Sir.—Have instructed Editor to pay you deposit for Rollers. They suit me splendidly. Several friends have been in to hear them, and they are delighted with them. Shall recommend you to others. Yours, E. Cooke." "186, County-road, Walton, Liverpool. January 15th. Sir,—I am well pleased with Roller from you, and have instructed Editor to pay you deposit. Yours, G. Bingham." "67, Vorley-road, Highgate, London. January 14th. Sir,—The Roller you sent me is an absolute rattler. I have some that cost me 10/6, and yours is equally as good as any of them. Yours, A. Moy." "Mill-road, Haverhill. January 22nd. Sir,—Received Hartz cock safe, and am well satisfied. I think they are well worth the money. Yours, E. Doc." "31, Monteith-st., Bridgeton, Glasgow. Sir,—Received Hartz cock, and it is singing lovely. Yours, J. Holmes." "34, King-st., Westhoughton, near Bolton. January 26th. Sir,—Received birds all right, and they have turned out champion. A friend came to look at them, and he sent to you for three straight away. Yours, T. Morris." "67, High-st., Treorchy. January 25th. Sir,—Received birds safely, and give every satisfaction, both in song and condition. Please send on twelve more cocks, P.O. enclosed. Shall have another order for you soon. Yours, J. Keller." Remember these letters say more for my Rollers than I could ever say myself, and they should settle beyond doubt as to who is best man to send to for satisfaction. You get full week's trial from me, and all your money back if not fully satisfied. See British Birds; also Appliance columns for further advertisements.

A Wonderful Entry of Birds has been accorded the management for the fiftieth great National Cage Bird Show at the Crystal Palace, held Feb. 5, 6, 8 & 9 next.

By the time our next issue is in the hands of our readers, the "Jubileo" Palace Show will be well under way, and that its career may prove both a pleasant and a prosperous one will we venture to think, be the wish of all bird-keepers. That this event is the fiftieth of its kind is known to all, we take it, and it is gratifying to learn that the Fancy and bird-lovers generally have rallied round the "Jubileo" exhibition in no uncertain manner, and shown their great regard for the time-honoured fixture at the Crystal Palace by breaking all records in the matter of entries. We learn with pleasure that the astonishing total of upwards of 2,800 entries has been received by the show manager, and that this includes practically all the best-known birds in the country. What glorious struggles for supremacy we may expect to see! And what a glorious feast for the eyes of visitors! Judging from letters received during the past two weeks, a record number of excursion parties is being arranged by fanciers in the various provincial centres, and interest in the event seems to have reached an unprecedentedly high pitch. That there will be a huge and record-breaking crowd of visitors from far and near seems to be assured.

It may be well to make it clear that the great "Jubilee" carnival is held on Friday, Saturday, Monday and Tuesday next, Feb. 5, 6, 8, and 9. The show will open at three o'clock on the Friday, and will close on the Tuesday, at 4 p.m. On the Friday, Saturday, and Monday the time of closing is from 9.30 to 10 p.m. On the Saturday, Monday, and Tuesday, the exhibition is opened at 10 a.m. There is nothing to pay for admission beyond the ordinary charge made for admittance to the Crystal Palace.

The show will be under the sole management of Mr. J. W. Ramsden, 11, Josephine-avenue, Brixton, London, S.W., who will accept orders for stalls and advertisements, and dispatch all birds at close of show, also dispatch tickets, labels, etc., and pay prize and sale money. Letters for Mr. Ramsden should be addressed direct to the Crystal Palace on the days of the show. Exhibitors should remember that the whole of the specimens must be in the Exhibition on Thursday, February 4th; any that may arrive afterwards will not be admitted into the Show.

The judges' lunch will be held in the Grill Room, Crystal Palace, on the Friday (Feb. 5th), chairman, G. Crabb, Esq.; covers at 1.30; tickets, 2s. 6d. each. Tickets can be had by exhibitors and friends on application to the Show Manager. Lunch will be over in time for the opening of the Show. Ladies cordially invited. This event will be specially interesting this year by reason of the presentations which are to be made to those veteran fanciers and judges, Messrs. "Joe" Hills and "Sam" Cook.

CAGE BIRDS will have its usual stall at the Palace, and we shall be pleased to welcome visitors, to greet old friends, and to make new friends. Our "Visitors' Book" will be in its usual place on the stall, and we trust everyone present will make a point of leaving their signatures there-in.

Results of Judging.

Telegrams or letters asking for results of judging to be given cannot be answered by the authorities. Under these circumstances CAGE BIRDS will be pleased to supply exhibitors with the result in any class upon compliance with the following rules:—

1. Fully-stamped (prepaid) postcards, letters, or telegraph forms must reach us, at 154, Fleet Street, not later than February 4th.

3. All applicants for results at the Palace must write RESULT on top left-hand corner of the envelope.

We will do our best to despatch as soon as judging permits. Any sent to the Palace direct will be treated last. Exhibitors must make their communications as brief, simple, and easy to understand, as possible. Owing to the enormous number of telegrams, letters, etc., we have to deal with, we cannot find time to wade through long letters, and any such will have to be put on one side and dealt with last of all.

A World's Record.

Just before going to press our representative was granted an interview by Mr. J. W. Ramsden, the indefatigable show manager, who at once informed us of the fact that the entry constituted "a world's record." The total number of exhibits entered is no less than 2,820, which represents an increase on the previous year's total of considerably over 400. Moreover, the number of exhibitors is this year 800, which also constitutes a record, and among the names appear many new ones.

We give below a tabulated list of entries for the nine years from 1901 to 1909 inclusive, from which it will be seen that the average number of entries over those years has been 2,282:—

| 1901 ... 2,633 | 1904 ... 2,018 | 1907 ... 2,163 |
| 1903 ... 2,093 | 1906 ... 2 237 | 1909 ... 2,820 |

The entries in the Crest, Crestbred, Belgian, and Scotch Fancy classes, we were informed, were somewhat poor, but those in the remainder of the classes were simply grand; it was, in fact, a champion entry all over with these few exceptions. The Norwich total close upon 300, and the Yorkshires 350. The Crests and Crestbreds number nearly 100. The Greens (both Norwich and Yorkshires), number 125, and the Lancashires and Lizards 44 and 40 respectively. There are 153 entries in the Border Fancy section, for which eight classes were provided. Perhaps the most remarkable feature of this year's entries is the grand muster of Dutch Frills, no fewer than nineteen of these birds having been entered. The class for London Fanciers has drawn an entry of five. In the Canary limit classes that for pairs (matched for Plainhead breeding) draws no less than 70 entries, this being the biggest class in the show. We give below a list of the entries in the Canary classes received up to the time of the interview:—

|---|---|---|---|
| Nor. Plainheads | 292 | Scotch Fancies ... | 25 |
| Yorkshires ... ... | 349 | Rollers ... ... ... | 107 |
| Border Fancies ... | 153 | Lizards ... ... | 40 |
| Cinnamons ... | 66 | Greens ... ... ... | 125 |
| Lancashires ... | 44 | Frills ... ... ... | 19 |
| London Fancies ... | 5 | A.O.V. ... ... ... | 18 |
| Limit ... ... ... | 265 | | |

MULES AND HYBRIDS.

The eleven classes provided in the schedule for Mules and Hybrids have drawn an entry of 174, giving an average of nearly 16 per class.

BRITISH AND FOREIGN BIRDS.

The British and Foreign, said Mr. Ramsden, are a really grand lot. The five classes for Bullfinches, Goldfinches, Linnets, and Chaffinches, we were told, had received 178 entries; the four classes for Redpolls, Twites, Siskins, Bramblefinches, and Greenfinches, 94; the eight classes for Hawfinches, Buntings, Thrushes, Magpies, etc., 104; the two classes for rare-feathered Britishers and A.S. hens (except Bullfinches), 34; and the five classes for Nightingales, Larks, A.O.S., etc., 71. There are 26 entries in the Limit class, which bring the total of exhibits in the British bird section up to 507, truly a magnificent collection.

In the foreign bird section the entries are as follows:—In the three classes for Budgerigars, A.O.S. Parrakeets and Parrots, 38; in the seven classes for Avadavats, Waxbills, Grosbeaks, Tanagers, Foreign Hybrids, etc, 77; and in the class for Goldfinches and Bullfinches, 14, making a grand total in the foreign bird section of 129. The Crystal Palace employees' class has an entry of 12, that for extra stock no less than 274, and that for cages 89.

There are three striking features about this year's entry which, we think, cannot be said of that of any previous year. The first is that no classes have had to be cancelled, the second, that no class has had to be amalgamated with another, and the third that no entries have been returned (at least, none up to the time writing). Mr. J. Hodder has the largest number of exhibits at this year's show, having entered 42 birds. Mr. C. T. Maxwell comes next in order with 38 entries, Mr. Francis next with 30, and Mr. Palmer next with 29. Birds have been entered from all parts of the United Kingdom, including Cork and Fort William.

Twenty-two of the classes have received over 25 entries. The v.h.c. birds in these classes thus become entitled to the extra prize of 2s. given by CAGE BIRDS, and the h.c. birds to that of 2s. presented by the London and Provincial Ornithological Society.

Just before our representative left, he was asked by Mr. Ramsden to thank the exhibitors for their splendid response to his appeal for a record entry.

To Exhibitors, Judges and Visitors.

Mr. J. W. Ramsden writes: Exhibitors are respectfully requested to dispatch their birds by the night trains on Wednesday, February 3rd, or by early trains on Thursday, February 4th, arriving at the London termini not later than 2 o'clock, so that they reach the Palace in good time. By so doing they will greatly assist the management, and their birds will then have time to recover from the fatigue of their journey before being judged. On account of the show having to open at 3 o'clock on the 5th, all birds arriving after Thursday 4th, will have to be marked "Too late for competition." The show attendants will be at the Palace to receive birds on Thursday morning, February 4th, at 10 o'clock.

Judges are particularly requested to be at the Palace as early as possible on the Friday morning, as owing to contracts with the Palace Company and the show printers, judging must be finished by 1 o'clock prompt. Will visitors intending to be present at the judges' lunch please send a post-card to me, so that proper provision can be made for them?

Rule 20, relating to the claiming of birds, must be strictly enforced. I must treat all alike. No birds can be claimed by me on other people's behalf until the first sales at the office window are over. This replies to some 20 to 30 applicants for limit class winners.

Club Meetings at the Palace.

Clubs desirous of holding meetings during the Palace Show should make early application to Mr. J. W. Ramsden, the show manager, who has the letting of the board-room, and other convenient rooms, for this purpose.

For convenience of visitors, we append the best routes to the Palace from the various railway termini:—

Railway Excursions to the Show.

Excursions will be run into London from most parts of the country on the date of the show by all the chief railway companies. On page 89 Mr Ramsden sends a list of the arrangements of which he has been notified. But this list must not be taken as a complete one; readers in the provinces should enquire at their local railway stations for particulars of the excursions that will be running up to London on the days during which the show is in progress.

 A Daring Pet.

We have a Linnet that comes out of its cage and will eat out of your hand. When it is perched on your finger in front of a looking glass it will look at itself and start flapping its wings at another bird, as he thinks. It will even go to the back of the looking-glass to see where it is, and start pecking at the wood on the back. When it is perched on your shoulder at meal times it is so daring that when it thinks you are not looking, it will steal tasty bits off your plate and fly back to its cage and eat them.—Sent by Gordon L. Hill (age 13), 78, Wilford Crescent East, Meadows, Nottingham.

*A Businesslike Parrot.

My father tells me that a friend had a Parrot, which he kept outside a lemonade shop, and every hot Sunday morning he would put it on the corner of a stall, and it used to attract the lookers-on by shouting out: "Now then, you miserable devils, what is the use of standing round the stall with your hands in your pockets?" "Bottle of beer, 1d.; kept in ice." "Here's a cooler for you." "Something to do you good." "You won't get drunk on this." "If you ain't got any money we'll trust you." "Drink it quick and clear away." He also said some other nice things.—Sent by Fred Solomons (age 11), 6, Anthony Street, Commercial Road, London, E.

*A Nest in a Pocket.

A farmer left his coat in an old loft. A pair of Starlings saw the coat on a nail and they built their nest in one of the pockets. In this curious place they laid their eggs and hatched their young ones. One day came the farmer for the coat. The mother bird fluttered away in fright; but the farmer was a kind-hearted old man, and he left the coat until the young ones had fled.—Sent by Thomas Mason (age 12), 6, Victoria Street, Withington, Manchester.

MR. J. GOVE (Arbroath).

It is with sincere regret, writes Mr. J. S. Napier (secretary of the Arbroath Scotch Fancy Club), that I have to announce the death, at the early age of 33 years, of Mr. J. Gove, one of our members. Mr. Gove was an enthusiastic fancier and a true lover of birds. In private life he was highly respected by reason of his quiet and unassuming manner and kindly nature. He died at Montrose (the town of his nativity) on January 12th, he having removed there the previous day. He leaves a widow and one son to mourn his loss, and to them the sympathy of all fanciers will, I feel sure, be extended.

We have secured the services of Messrs. J. Robson and H. W. Battye as judges for our next show, on November 5th and 6th, writes Mr. G. Havver, secretary Blaydon-on-Tyne and Dis. C.B.S. The members have reduced their membership fee from 6s. to 4s. per year. Any fancier wishing to join will be heartily welcomed.

The members of the Jarrow, Hebburn and Dis. C.B.S., writes Mr. Robt. Blore, the hon. secretary, held their first social on January 20th, when, considering the bad state of trade, we did fairly well. Very nearly all the members were present and enjoyed themselves up to the mark.

We are sorry to have to inform you of the death of our buff Cinnamon cock Canary, 1st and special at South Shields, 2nd at Wallsend, 4th at Jarrow, and 1st and special at Gateshead in pair class, the only times he was shown in 1908, write Messrs. Seely Bros (Choppington Colliery).

The Northern Crest Club balance-sheet for 1908 shows a cash balance of just over £2, which, in addition to the assets consisting of two cups, valued at £5 5s. each, leaves the club in a satisfactory position. During the season the sum of over £11 has been expended in medals and prize money for the members.

The note of the Storm Cock, writes Miss Vera Wainwright (Peaslako), has been heard by two gentlemen, and on two different occasions in Surrey, not far from Guildford. Flocks of Long-tailed Tits, too, have been observed, one composed of about 50, and one of about 20 birds. The Heron has also been seen in the neighbourhood.

Great National Cage Bird Show, Crystal Palace, 1909.—R. A. Newley begs to announce that he will have a fine exhibition of bird cages and sundries of all kinds on his stall at the above show. Inspection and patronage of fanciers and public visiting is respectfully invited. Address all communications to R. A. Newley, 24, Stockwell Green, London, S.W.—(ANVT.)

I hope to be able to visit the forthcoming "Jubilee" Crystal Show, writes Mr. D. Kinlayside (Edinburgh), and let your office-boy know that the Scotch are famous for more things than shortbread and painting cards. I shall hope to bring some of my models of staging, etc. (such as is used at the Scottish National Show), and find a small space for them on CAGE BIRDS stall.

We shipped another very large consignment of Canaries to New York on January 22nd, write Messrs. Mackley Bros., the well-known Norwich bird specialists, by the White Star Liner, "Arabic," numbering just 3,000, including Norwich Crests, Norwich Plainheads, Cinnamons, Yorkshires, Lizards, and a large quantity of Goldfinch and Canary Mules.

Fanciers will note that I have changed my address from Kirkburn Place to 25, Willow Street, Girlington, Bradford, writes Mr. A. Pullan.

Owing to a change in my business, writes Mr. C. A. Fisher (London, E.C.), I am compelled to dispose of the whole of my stock of birds, very much to my regret. I notice a correspondent asks the name of the maker of a certain seed or water pot, reg. No. 493,473. I may say that I have one with such a number, which I got from Mr. E. Pass, cage maker, Hucknall Torkard, Notts.

I have been appointed secretary of the Southport and Dis. C.B.S., writes Mr. Benj. Bullough, 161, Portland Street, Southport. All communications respecting the society should therefore be addressed to me. I should be glad to hear of anyone desirous of joining this society. A pair table show will be held at Thorp Restaurant on February 18th, when Mr. W. Millburn will judge.

The Glasgow and West of Scotland N.M.B. and F.B. Club comes with flying colours out of the trouble connected with the last show. That this society has a host of friends and well-wishers is proved by the fact that no less than £45 was subscribed to wipe out the deficit. Thus on the year's working (vide balance-sheet, duly audited, to hand this week), a sum of £4 19s. remains in hand, which must be very gratifying to the secretary, Mr. R. A. Brown, and his fellow workers and members.

The balance-sheet of the Morpeth and Dis. C.B.S. for the year ending October 31st, 1908, shows a cash balance in hand of £5 11s. 3d., which, considering the society started from "rock-bottom" twelve months before, is a capital result. The hon. secretary, Mr. E. Cowling, the hon. treasurer, Mr. A. G. Marshall, and the other officials are to be complimented on the success attained.

Jubilee Palace Show.—Record broken. Close on 3,000 entries. Wonderful limit and stock classes. Unpredecented bargains. Many noted fanciers clearing surplus stock at marvellously low prices. Come in your thousands. The chance of a lifetime to secure good stock at bad prices. Show opens Friday, February 5th, at three o'clock, and closes Tuesday, 9th, at four o'clock.—ADVT.

The York C.B.S. has just issued a very attractive programme for the 1909 season, comprising lectures, rambles, drives, washing exhibitions, a concert, members', etc., shows. The subscription to this go-ahead society is very moderate (6d. per month), and fanciers interested can obtain full particulars from the hon. secretary, Mr. A. Waud, 3, Wilton Crescent, Fulford Road, York.

Our thirteenth annual open show is to be held on December 1st and 2nd next, writes Mr. W. S. Negus, secretary of the Cardiff and Dis. C.B.S., when it is hoped fanciers will give us their loyal support as in past years. We have secured the services of Messrs. Payne (Gloucester) and Robson (London) to act as judges thereat, and it is also probable that the classification will be considerably extended.

The balance-sheet of the Highgate, Hampstead, and Dis. C.B.S. for the year ending December 31st, 1908, shows a cash balance of £1 17s. 5½d., which, together with assets amounting to over £15 (which includes a £5 5s. silver cup), and considering the society had only been in existence some ten months at the close of the year, reflects the greatest credit on Mr. G. H. Neal, the hon. secretary, Mr. Reynolds, his predecessor, and the other officials.

I was pleased to note the Buff Coppy cock illustrated upon the frontispiece of your last issue, writes Mr. James Tottle (Frome). I may add that the bird is now my property. Great credit is due to Mr. Norman for the excellent, life-like drawing he has made of the bird. I made the purchase some weeks ago, which completes my stock of about four pairs of this variety, and I am hopeful of being able to produce a few good ones during the coming season.

National British Bird and M.C.

The annual general meeting of the N.B.B. and M.C. will be held on Saturday, February 6th, in the Board Room, Crystal Palace, at 6 o'clock. Any member having a proposition to put before the meeting, we shall be glad to receive same before the 5th.—PLUMBRIDGE ANN CARR, hon. secretaries, 2, Broad Street Station, London, E.C.

A Two-headed Blackbird.

At Linwood, near Paisley, it is said that a Blackbird, which is the possessor of two almost distinctly formed heads, has been seen. It has two bills, and has been seen to pick and make use of both, but whether it can pass food through both cannot yet be definitely stated. During the recent stormy weather the bird came to feed with others at a spot on the river bank where a good deal of waste bread is thrown out by the employees in a public work, who examined the strange creature leisurely through a window at a distance of 8ft. Whether this account is true, we cannot, of course, say.

For Faithful Service.

As already mentioned in your columns, writes Mr. J. W. Ramsden, the manager of the Crystal Palace Show, I have been asked by one or two regular exhibitors at the Palace to suggest that the Jubilee Show would be a suitable place for some recognition to be made to the two "veterans" who have fed and tended the exhibits at the National Shows so well for over forty years. I shall be pleased to receive subscriptions, no matter how small, from exhibitors who would like in this way to recognise Messrs. Small and Gritchfield's long and faithful services. They may be paid to me on the Friday or Saturday at the Palace Show, or forwarded at once through the post.

The Novices Notebook.

This page will consist of topical hints, addressed chiefly to beginners, concerning every branch of the hobby of bird-keeping, and the notes will be contributed from time to time by various leading experts.

The Softbill's Mainstay.

In meating-off softbilled species, it goes without saying that one cannot always devote unlimited time to hunting after their natural food to provide sufficient of this to keep the birds going. On the contrary, in the case of a working-man fancier, it frequently happens that a very short space of time each day is all that can be devoted to such outdoor pursuits in the cause of the hobby.

For all such as these the ubiquitous mealworm is the only really reliable mainstay for meating-off the birds. True, it is a very expensive one, so long as a bird's food is practically limited to mealworms; but, after all, the outlay is very often a cheap speculation, as in all save quite exceptional cases there will be very little difficulty in getting the birds on to a cheaper form of food in due course, by doling out this luxurious feed with a free hand during the sulky early stages succeeding their capture. Indeed, there is no more universally tempting a bait for all the softbills than mealworms. And it does not matter whether the mealworms be large or small, alive or dead, chopped up or whole—any way and any time the dish is acceptable.

Writing of chopped worms is not, perhaps, literally correct. What is meant is that you should just crush the heads in order to kill them, and prevent their crawling away; and if it is thought desirable cut them into two or three pieces, mixing a fair proportion of these in the soft food offered, so that the bird will the more quickly learn to eat the latter by first picking amongst it to find the bits of worms.

Whole worms should also be offered in addition to these broken ones, but it is necessary to kill these, too, in order to prevent their escaping, and as a lively worm or two is the most tempting bait of all in the first few hours, the old-fashioned watch-glass trick is still useful enough to be resorted to at a pinch. This consists of placing a live worm or two either on the floor of the cage and covering them over with a watch glass, or putting the worms in the bottom of the food vessel and covering them in the same way, then putting around the sides of the glass a little of the usual soft food, so that the bird when tempted to "go for" the live worm it sees under the glass will sooner or later find the pieces scattered among the food and turn its attention to them, and finally take to the food. In any case, do not begrudge a fresh-caught softbill a free supply of mealworms. It may be, and probably will be, a case of sparing the worm and losing the bird.

A Timely Supplication.

"Lead us not into temptation," may with all due reverence be the daily appeal of the novice from this time onwards until at least the middle of March next, which is "so near and yet so far." "So near," because either in prospect or retrospect the time is separated from the present by such an apparently trifling interval; and yet in that short time such vast changes are possible that the effect under certain conditions will last for months after that interval has passed, and may even have a very material effect all through the year, so that in a very real sense the middle of March is still a long, long way off.

The necessity for a timely hint to guard against temptation is shown by years of experience to be none the less urgent because it has been reiterated year after year with commendable punctuality, yet all too seldom, or may be, too weakly, to prevent many a beginner having his hopes blighted by falling into the snare every year. Perhaps, in spite of every caution, many another will make a similar error. We cannot help that. But we can at any rate prevent any shadow of the fault resting upon our august heads, by repeating the warning now.

The temptation to push forward the mating of birds is terribly strong, when, soon after the turn of the year, the birds begin to brighten up and put on vigour almost every day, and the cocks are incessantly singing from dawn to dusk. They will almost invariably be affected in this way in any condition of weather, but when the weather is the least bit mild or Spring-like, even for a day or two, the birds are such thorough-going creatures of the hour that the hens will soon appear feverishly anxious to set about nesting, and the cocks almost bursting their throats with song, and likewise appearing "mad to begin." Then, truly, the temptation is strong, and human nature is weak—never more weak than when unchastened by a few blighted hopes and disappointments.

Never Search After Excuses.

Thus it is that the raw novice, even if he has read such warnings as that given above, will be only too ready to believe that these apply only to some ordinary its existence is so small that the experienced breeder, who, mind you, knows how to succeed, and does succeed, would not find it with a microscope, although it may loom very large in the mind of the novice who wants it to be so. It is purely a case with the novice of the wish being father to the thought, and he of all others should take to heart the appeal with which we began, that he be not led into temptation.

To Curb Misjudged Desires.

If there is any likelihood that one's birds are in too fresh condition under average conditions of weather, the diet should be kept on the plain side, and the usual supply of extras or stimulating foods of any description should be cut down by one-half, especially in the case of the hens, and should an interval of exceptionally mild weather come upon us these extras should be cut off entirely for the time being, and the diet limited to plain Canary seed only, with just a scrap of bread and milk once a week, and a pinch of summer rape once in three or four days. Even these simple extras may with advantage be withheld for a time if the birds are really very fresh, and in all type of case, and that the case of his own particular birds is so far out of the ordinary run as to be quite beyond the pale of ordinary methods of treatment. In his young experience the circumstances are altogether exceptional, and require extraordinary treatment.

The next step is an easy one to a mind already biassed in a given direction, and consists of discovering some seemingly valid excuses for putting the birds together—a quest in which the imagination can do much to deceive the owner. Anyway, when one begins to suppose that he may succeed or that the circumstances governing his stock warrant him in beginning breeding operations a few months in advance of the usual time, the probability is that the birds go together, and the result is almost as invariably, if not literally, a "wailing and a gnashing of teeth," a rude awakening, and, may be, an inborn resolve not to wilfully tempt fate or ride to a fall in the future.

No; do not waste a thought in trying to discover an exceptional point about your stock which warrants their mating for some months to come. The chance of cases give a few grains of Epsom salts in the water about every third day, whilst the mild weather lasts.

This will be far better than encouraging the birds to a more forward condition. The cocks should, in the natural course of events, be singing well and lustily now, so you must not take their ordinary vocal efforts to indicate any uncommon precocity.

Points About Outdoor Aviaries.

Ever since we took a case in point and described in detail how to convert an indoor spare room into an aviary for breeding purposes, about a year ago, we have had repeated requests from time to time for information concerning outdoor aviaries, and how to evolve and arrange them out of a room—as often as anything else the room in question is a mere shed—already in existence. The request may appear simple enough to each individual enquirer, who knows the particular building and the locality inside out, so to speak, so that he is blissfully ignorant of the insuperable difficulties of taking any particular case out of doors and dealing with it from a general point of view, in order to make it of interest to the general reader, as could be easily done in the case of an indoor room.

Outside the case is totally different, and the general conditions to which an outside building is subject, vary so greatly that it is practically impossible to take a particular case in one spot and make it generally applicable elsewhere. Locality, site, position, attitude, and aspect, which all have a very great influence upon the occupants, are points which vary to an unlimited extent, and it must be extremely rare for any one existing building which one wishes to convert into an aviary to be the exact counterpart of another.

But we may at least venture on a few useful hints as to the most serviceable arrangements of cardinal points which seem to be suggested by the querists themselves.

UNDER THE WHITE ROSE.

GREAT Horton Good Intent O.S. held their annual tea and concert on January 16th, in the Co-operative Cafe, Great Horton, when over forty members and friends did full justice to the good things provided and spent a very enjoyable evening. During an interval in the entertainment, the prizes which had been won at the members' shows last season were presented to the successful competitors, and many hopes were expressed for a still better season to come. This society is now in a very good position, both financially and numerically. May further prosperity attend the efforts of the members.

WINDHILL Society held their annual gathering on the 23rd inst., many members and friends putting in an appearance to enjoy the hospitality. A good "knife and fork" tea was provided, the evening being spent "midst smoke and song." The prizes for the members' shows were presented to the winners.

THE whist drive and dance promoted by the Shipley and Dist. O.S. took place on Tuesday evening, January 19th, in the Cafe rooms adjoining Saltaire Station. About 18 tables were filled for the whist drive, the first of 22 games being started just turned 7.30, and the final at about 10.15. Supper was then served, the remaining two hours being taken up by "tripping on the light fantastic toe" in the ballroom.

HALIFAX open show held on Saturday last was a splendid affair, the entries in all sections (except foreign) coming up exceedingly well, 542 birds being staged in 34 classes, an average of about 16 per class. The society this year made a good move by holding their show in the large hall of the Mechanics' Institute, a very central place, a large airy room, and one that is very free from draught. They have to pay somewhat heavy for this room, but the extra good gate received will very likely balance matters from the financial point of view.

BRADFORD East hold their first open show to-day (Saturday), and are confident of having a rattling good show. It is to be hoped that they will have, for plenty of hard work has been put in, and this should meet with a just reward. This show is the last but one of the season under the control of the Yorkshire Union. Next week is left open on account of the Palace Show; then, on the 13th February, Wakefield close the competitions and shows for the season. It is to be hoped that Wakefield will receive a bumping entry, to help them on their way rejoicing.

Foreign Birds for Beginners.

By FRANK FINN, B.A., F.Z.S.,
Author of "Pets and How to Keep Them."

A companion article to Mr. Goodchild's Coloured plate which was presented with the Birthday Number of "Cage Birds."

It will be noticed that Mr. Dewar speaks of the song of the Avadavat, and indeed this little bird is not only the brightest in colour, but the most musical of all the Waxbills, its song much resembling that of our Willow Wren—a dainty little strain just suited to the fragile little being that utters it. The Avadavat is the hardiest of the Waxbills, and can be safely trusted to winter outside; it will also breed in captivity, but cannot be recommended as a certainty in that respect. The nest is a domed structure of grass or fibre, and the eggs, as with all Waxbills, are white.

The Green Avadavat.

Next below the common Avadavat will be seen his green relative, the Green Avadavat (Stictospiza formosa), which in India is rather absurdly known as Hurry Lal, "the Green Red"! The fact is, that the common name of the Common Avadavat is "Lal Munia," the Red Finch or Waxbill; then it has got called "Lal," the red, for short, and so its relative gets its very Irish-sounding title.

The sexes differ much less in this species than in the Common Avadavat, the hen being merely pale primrose instead of bright Canary-yellow underneath. Although also Indian, it is a far less common bird than the Red Avadavat, even in India proper, and it is not found out of that country at all. Thus it is a far less common and more expensive bird, but it is almost as nice a little creature when you have got it; I do not say quite, because I think red is a prettier colour than green!

The Gold-breasted Waxbill.

Just above the Common Avadavat will be seen the gold-breasted Waxbill (Sporaegithus subflavus), the most minute bird which is regularly imported. In this midget species the hen also differs in being much less richly coloured below than the cock, in particular showing no orange on the breast. The bars on the flanks are, no doubt, the excuse for calling this bird the Zebra Waxbill, but this name is not very appropriate at the best of times, and is also very apt to lead to confusion with the Zebra Finch, next to be noticed, and, as the picture shows, a very different bird.

Like all the Waxbills except the two Avadavats, this is an African bird; it is, for a Waxbill, a hardy little creature, and has bred even in an outdoor aviary.

The Zebra Finch.

The Zebra Finch (Taeniopygia castanotis), a particularly jolly little bird, is seen in the illustration perkily perched at the top of a twig, with all his very pretty and variegated colouring well shown off. The hen is not so handsomely plumaged as her mate, wanting all the special bright patches—the orange on the cheeks, the Zebra-barred bib, and the white-dotted chestnut of the sides, but is so like him in other respects as to be easily recognisable. The young resemble her, but have black instead of red bills.

The amateur is more likely to be able to study the young of these than those of any of the other species shown here, for the Zebra Finch is far the most ready breeder of the lot, and in his ardour for reproduction of the species strongly reminds one of the British Sparrow. Like that bird, he builds a big, untidy nest.

Will Winter Outside.

The Zebra Finch will winter outside well, and it is the best of all the very small birds for the beginner, being hardy in constitution and so very ready a breeder. It is an Australian bird, and very freely imported; otherwise, it would no doubt have been fully domesticated by this time. The cock's song is a very comical performance, a sort of little three-line-and-a-half verse constantly repeated; the ordinary note is a squeak continually uttered, as it were mechanically jerked out of the birds as they hop about.

The Double-banded Finch.

The Double-banded Finch (Stictoptera bichenovii), often known as Bicheno's Finch, is also an Australian species, and one which always engages the affections of bird keepers on account of its chaste colouring and dainty and refined appearance.

Unfortunately, the sexes are practically alike, but the hen is said to be slightly duller. It is rather scarce compared with the birds I have been dealing with, and decidedly expensive, costing three times as much as these; moreover, it is somewhat delicate, although exhibiting an inclination to breed, like so many Australian birds.

It has been successfully wintered out-of-doors, and it has produced a Hybrid with the Zebra Finch.

The Long-tailed Grass Finch.

The Long-tailed Grassfinch (Pœphila acuticauda), although devoid of any brilliant colours in its plumage, also has so refined and elegant an appearance, with its long, tapering, black tail feathers, that it is an ornament to any collection.

The sexes are alike, and on the whole the bird is very much like the Parson Finch (Pœphila cincta), a bird which seems to have been less freely imported of late than it used to be. The Parson Finch, however, has an ordinary short tail and a black bill. This is an Australian species, and, like most birds from that country, does well in captivity.

The Diamond Sparrow.

The Diamond Sparrow (Stagonopleura guttata), a beautiful Australian bird, is now not nearly so familiar in the bird trade as formerly, its appearance with the dealers being quite occasional, which is a pity, as it is one of the most striking foreign Finches, as the illustration well shows.

It is bigger than most of the species I am dealing with, being as large as a Siskin, at least, and stoutly built for its size.

The only noticeable sex difference is that the hen has a pink line where the upper bill joins the forehead, instead of this being uniformly red as in the cock.

The Diamond Sparrow is not nearly related to the typical Sparrows, but it has a good share of their impudence, as it has been found in the wild state building in the under part of the eyrie of a bird of prey—not one of the Sparrow Hawk type, however. The cock indulges in a very comical dance when courting his mate.

The Orange Bishop.

The Orange Bishop (Pyromelana franciscana) is one of those birds that arrest everybody's attention on sight, as may easily be noticed by visitors to the Zoo, where specimens of the species are always on view in the Weaver birds' compartment of the Western Aviary. The orange-red parts of the plumage, however, vary in intensity; in some specimens they are, indeed, only orange; but some are vermilion, running into blood-red on the back. The bird, in accordance with his rich attire, is about the most bumptious of all small species—for he is only about as big as the Diamond Sparrow abovementioned. It is most amusing to see him hopping about, swelling out his plumage till he is almost round, in paying court to his modest-plumaged little mate, who is absolutely unlike him, and bears the streaky-brown plumage so familiar in many of our own birds, such as the Skylark.

It is all very well for her husband to show himself off, but his fine feathers will not last, so perhaps he does well to make the most of them; the fact being that the red and black attire is only his wedding-dress, as during the winter months he has the same sober plumage as the hen birds. This is, of course, rather a drawback to him as a pet; but his extreme beauty in the summer months makes full amends. Moreover, he is a hardy bird, and cheap; but not a likely breeder.

The Green Singing Finch.

The next, and last, species to be noticed is the Green Singing Finch (Serinus icterus). Fanciers will immediatey recognise in this quietly-coloured little bird a nearer approach to the more typical Finches. The Green Singing Finch is, indeed, one of the Serin group, and closely related to the Canary. In fact, it is too closely related to that bird to like its company, and hence the two species are not good associates in an aviary, unless an attempt is being made to breed Mules between them.

The sex difference in this bird merely consists in the female being noticeably duller; the male also, as one might expect from its relatives, is a good singer, and makes a very nice little cage songster.

It builds a nest of the typical Finch style, an open cup, and will breed quite readily in confinement, while, as it is hardy outdoors, it has sufficient all-round recommendations to make up for plumage, which is not very striking for a foreign cage bird. In size it is about as big as our Siskin.

Birds' Eggs, and Some Problems of Colouration.

By J. B. BROWN.

A paper recently read before the members and friends of the Hawick Ornithological Society.

There are two problems in bird life which have as yet baffled all enquiry. They are first their migratory habits, and secondly, the colouring of their eggs. Of the first, this wonderful instinct of migration, much has been written; volumes have been devoted to the subject; but in none of them can we find any explanation why certain birds, like the Swift for an example, annually make their appearance among us on a certain day and as punctually leave on a certain date each year when summer is on the wane.

Of the second problem—the subject matter of this paper, the colouring of their eggs, very little has been written. I have waded through every book in our Public Library on bird lore, and I have been able to find but little allusion to it. I have found pictures there representing the eggs beautifully coloured and faithfully reproduced, but I could find nothing in those books telling one why they are thus coloured. This problem is really in this way—that two questions have to be asked. First, why are they coloured? Then, how is it done? Both questions are as yet unanswered, and I do not presume to answer them; I can only ask you to form yonr own opinion on the matter. I hope that what I am about to tell you may prove of interest to your society, and perhaps lead some member to pursue the investigation of the subject, and in the end solve the problems.

First, then, a word or two about the egg itself may not be out of place, for the egg of a bird presents an example of a familiar, and readily accessible, kind, for the study of the development of species. It consists of an outward porous shell, through which air can pass in and out; of a membrane lining the shell; of the white arranged in layers; of the two twisted ends called Chalazae, one at either end of the egg, and which serve to protect the yolk from shock or injury; of the yolk itself also enclosed in a thin skin, and of what is termed the "cicatricula," lying on the upper surface of the yolk, perhaps more generally known as the "blastoderm:" this latter is the actual seat of the changes of development. All the other parts, white, yolk, etc., are merely accessory structures. As soon as incubation begins, on the second day, this blastoderm begins to form a little pulsating point or heart. From that to the 20th or 21st day the chicken rapidly grows, pushing its beak through the shell until it emerges into the world, the shell which has protected it so long being discarded as now quite useless.

But to the subject under discussion: why are birds' eggs coloured? We must go back, very very far back indeed, back to the days when the world was young, if we would find any explanation at all. And that is

But Theoretical.

First of all, then, we will take the conclusions current among those naturalists who have studied the question as to the significance of white eggs. Speculation on this matter began and seems to have ended, with Alfred Russell Wallace's theory propounded some years ago, and the general concensus of opinion is that at one time all birds nested in holes in the rocks, and all birds laid white eggs. It is not difficult to believe this, for coloured eggs would become practically invisible in these dark places, and consequently would be in hourly jeopardy of being overrun by the bird when entering the nest, and broken; or would, when the space was large enough, be in danger of rolling away from the sitting bird, and so fail to obtain incubation. Through being white, such faint rays of light as gained admittance to the nest would be reflected by the white shell, and consequently no eggs would escape the necessary attention of the sitting bird. The white eggs of Wood-pigeons have always been a stumbling block to this, and much special pleading, has been resorted to by many for explaining away the difficulties they present. It has been urged that here the whiteness is protective, since from the loose and careless way the nest is built, light is always visible through it when looked at from below, and thus the white shell cannot be distinguished from patches of light. But such enemies as would be on the look-out for these eggs would attack them from above, when such confusion between shadow and substance would not occur.

Surely the matter can be explained in another way. That is to say, that the whiteness of the egg of the Wood-pigeon is a survivial of the time, when, like the Rock-dove and the Stock Dove, they nested in dark places. All who keep pigeons know that their nesting places must be dark, for the bird has never changed its early habits. The lack of colour in the egg of the Wood-pigeon to-day, under the now existing circumstances, can be attributed to the fact that the eggs are sufficiently well concealed by the overhanging foliage; or that enemics are not sufficiently numerous to render any colour necessary, or numerous enough to bring about the destruction of the species. That this contention with regard to is correct, seems highly probable, since it would appear that birds which have taken to nesting in holes, after having developed coloured eggs laid in the open, have again taken to lay white eggs. More accurately speaking, they have taken to covering the coloured surface of their eggs with a layer of chalky white. The eggs of the Puffin are an example of this. Beneath the white layer, the original coloured surface, with a little close examination, can be discerned.

But then again, we must take into consideration the fact that a bird cannot at will change the colour of its egg; it must bring it about very gradually. We must also consider that it may suddenly vary its nesting-place, so that the white colouring on the Puffin's egg may have come about because it has made its home where lime and chalk are abundant. Admitted. But against this, we will take the case of the Snow-bunting, a peculiar example of environment not regulating the colour of the egg. The Snow-bunting's egg is remarkable for its richness of colouration, and, in Scotland, is placed in a hole in the rock, a habit rendered necessary by the nature of the surroundings. But in Siberia, where its home is, it makes its nest under tussocks of grass, which harmonise with the colour of eggs and nest and all. We are referring to this question of harmony of colours presently, and here also we meet with great difficulties. That the were without doubt white, with a tendency to develop a red pigment, is seen in the eggs of that peculiar bird of New Zealand, the "Apteryx": the bird termed Archaic: the most original type of bird life extant.

CLUB REPORTS.

RUTHERGLEN AND DISTRICT O.A.

General meeting held on Jan. 18, Mr. Manson presiding. The secretary presented the financial statement for the show and also of the year's transactions, which showed a slight balance on the right side. Considering the extra expenses for staging, this was considered highly satisfactory. The election of office-bearers for the year was then proceeded with. Result: Hon. president, Provost Johnstone; president, W. Moffat; vice-presidents, J. J. Manson and T. A. Boyd; committee, Messrs. Lappin, Hutchison, McAulay, Livingstone, and Joel; secretary and treasurer, F. Wilson, 9, Jedburgh Avenue. The secretary exhibited an egg of the Blue-breasted Waxbill. He regretted that the pair of these interesting birds had not yet settled down to breed, but stated that he was still hopeful of success. All the members present were quite enthusiastic regarding the coming season.—F. WILSON, Sec.

MORPETH AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Monthly meeting held on January 22nd, when a good muster of members turned up, and the enthusiasm displayed speaks well for the success of the coming year. The date of our next show was fixed for October 16th, when we hope to present to exhibitors a good classification for open section, and trust, by studying the needs of both exhibitors and exhibits, fanciers will rally around us as they did last year. In the members' section there will be seven classes confined to the novice, and about the same number for the ordinary member. The novice member will have the privilege of transferring his exhibits into the ordinary members' or open classes. It was also decided that we be affiliated to the Cage Bird Union. We are having a supper and social evening on February 19th (at Vose's Room), when we shall be delighted to welcome fanciers, providing they notify the secretary not later than February 12th. Our books are open for the enrolment of new members, and we shall be pleased to hear from anyone desirous of joining us.—E. COWLING, sec.

PRESTON O.S.

Annual meeting held in the rooms on January 18th, Mr. J. W. Cleminson, vice-chairman, in the chair. There was a very fair attendance. The secretary was instructed to write to Messrs. Brown and Smith, of Lancaster, for the return of the prize money gained by them at our November show, they having been suspended for two years for malpractices at that show. The following gentlemen, all of Preston, were elected to membership:—Messrs. D. Metcalf, D. Mooh, J. Thompson, Wm. Thompson, A. Burrows, and T. H. Dent. The election of officers then took place. The chairman and secretary having resigned, the following were declared elected:—Chairman, Mr. T. H. Dent; vice-chairman, Mr. A. Burrows; treasurer, Mr. J. P. Leeming; secretary, Mr. R. Taylor, Lime Kiln Inn, Preston; assistant secretary, Mr. J. W. Cleminson; delegate to the C.B.U., Mr. J. W. Cleminson; committee: Messrs. J Curwen, H. Marsh, Rd. Anderton, J. Swarbrick, F. Issott, T. Leeming, W. Parkinson, and W. Lewis. The February show was fixed for February 13th, but it has since been discovered that the exhibition of the Preston Scientific Society (in whose rooms the meetings are held), is open from the 6th to the 20th, so that another date will have to be arranged, probably 27th February. Mr. A. Wellings was recommended as judge. It was resolved that the following resolution be forwarded to the C.B.U.:—"That in the opinion of this society, Rule 17 should be altered so as to make it unlawful for non-union exhibitors to compete at union shows, and would go even further and say it shall be illegal for a union member to judge at a non-union show." The secretary was instructed to forward a vote of thanks to Chas. Blackhurst, Esq., M.R.C.V.S., the retiring chairman, for his valuable services to the society.—W. HY. HEATHCOTE, late Sec.

POPLAR AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

A Cage-making Demonstration.

Meeting held December 31st. The chair was taken by our vice-president, Mr. J. T. Hammond, in the unavoidable absence of our chairman. We were favoured with a cage-making demonstration by Mr. C. A. Mead (Walthamstow), who, being a practical man, was able to illustrate the ways and means of making a cage in the best possible manner. He said: Although I am asked to give you a demonstration on cage-making, I would rather it should have been against it, for my advice is, that if you have not the convenience it is best not to take the job on, but go to the local grocer and there select a box of about the size you require, and ask him to save you as many as you require. After getting the box (or boxes, as the case may be), give it a good dressing with strong No. 2 glass-paper, inside and out, after which give it two or three coats of paint; you will then have a cage far better than you could have made yourself. For the fronts, measure up the size you require, and send to one of the firms advertising in the Fancy Press, and you will find this is not only the cheapest but the cleanest way, and after having finished with the cage you can break it up with the knowledge that after all it has cost you very little. It is my opinion that there are three kinds of fanciers interested in cage birds, namely, those who have no convenience, those who make them for the sake of saying so, and those who can afford to pay and have everything "just so." For those who will make their own cages, I will endeavour to show them the best way to go about it. I find one of the things that most puzzle the novice is to make a joint, and I will show you how this is done. Select a piece of inch deal about three feet long by five inches wide, lay it on the table or bench, and insert two screws about two inches from the top end. This makes what is termed in the trade a shooting board. Now take the two pieces of wood intended for your back, and which you want to join up, and, putting them together, make a pencil mark across the joint, then lay the plane upon its side, holding the one piece of wood you intend to join with the left hand, and the plane in the right; the joint is very soon made by placing one piece of the board with the mark up, and the other with the mark down. You will now see how useful the shooting board is for squaring up all parts of the cage and getting them true. After getting the top and bottom to a size, also the ends and back jointed, you proceed to make the top rail and front piece, and the loose piece at the bottom, and by selecting a piece of wood about four inches wide, and cutting it off to the length required, it is very soon made into three pieces by the use of the cutting gauge. (Members were very interested in this handy little tool.) This gauge is capable of doing very many jobs, and is also a substitute for many tools. It can be used for cutting down, cutting square and round holes in the ends of show cages, and many other jobs. I will now proceed to put the cage together. Should you find your boards inclined to bend or buckle, you can remedy this by guiding the board as you nail up, or, better still, if you reverse the buckle to the light it will cause it to go back into its original flatness. I may mention, gentlemen, that light will cause wood to buckle as the wood is drawn to it, and by the same rule that it draws one side, if the board is reversed it will draw it back; or if you should have two pieces buckled, lay one on the other, one buckle up and the other buckle down, and they will revert to their original shape in a few hours. Now, having finished the cage, I will ask your attention for a little longer while I show you how to make what I consider a very important item in the bird-room, namely, a rack to put your cages on. This proved a very useful and novel rack to hold cages in sets of four high, the making of which was carried out in a very masterful way by Mr. Mead. This ended the demonstration, which was followed with marked attention by the 27 members present. Many questions were asked and satisfactorily answered, and the general opinion was that it was by far the best to buy cages ready made unless sufficient tools were at command. A very hearty vote of thanks was proposed by the Chairman, and responded to most heartily; thus ended a most instructive and pleasant evening. The attendance was good, especially considering how very wet and miserable the evening was.—H. W. COOK, Hon. Sec.

CHELTENHAM C.B.S.

There was a large attendance at the annual general meeting, held at headquarters, on January 13th. The treasurer read the balance-sheet, which showed a balance of about £2 on the year's working. This was considered very satisfactory, and the report was unanimously adopted. Mr. T. J. King proposed the re-election of the officers, and congratulated them on the year's work and the balance-sheet; this was duly seconded, and unanimously carried. The officers elected were:—President, W. Theohald, Esq.; chairman, Mr. G. Grant; vice-chairman, Mr. J. Hands; hon. auctioneer, Mr. J. H. Boulter; hon. auditors, Messrs. T. J. King and J. H. The next open show is fixed for November 3rd, 1909.

GREAT HORTON GOOD INTENT ORNITHOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

The annual tea and concert and distribution of prizes took place on Jan. 16 at the Great Horton Co-operative Cafe, and although the weather was bad there was a splendid turn-up of fanciers and friends, and when a good tea had been partaken of, Mr. R. Halliday was voted to the chair, a position he is well adapted for. An excellent programme was opened by Mrs. James Snowden with a splendid pianoforte selection. She then accompanied for the rest of the evening. Mr. H. F. Chubb, Mr. H. Ackroyd, Miss Annie Fieldhouse, Mr. Ed. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Nuttall, Mrs. A. W. Hartley, and Miss Clarice Nuttall obliged with some capital songs and duets. During the interval Mr. R. Halliday presented the special prizes that were competed for during 1908 to the following gentlemen: Messrs. A. Holden, A. Firth, H. Schofield, T. L. Whiteley, H. F. Chubb, S. Briggs, G. Newell, H. Birbeck; and for starred birds at each show Messrs. A. Firth, H. F. Chubb, A. W. Hartley, A. Holden, and T. L. Whiteley won extra specials. The music and mirth were then resumed, and both the comic side and sentimental were well catered for. A hearty vote of thanks was passed to the chairman and artistes, and although the programme had to be shortened, all present seemed to enjoy themselves and left talking about next year's concert.—H. SCHOFIELD, Hon. Sec.

The financial statement was submitted, and was considered highly satisfactory, as there was a substantial balance on the right side. It was agreed that in future the British bird exhibitors nominate the birds that are to compete for cup; also that we re-arrange the Canary classes to conform with the specialist clubs' regulations at the March meeting. Also it was agreed that the members pay half their annual subscriptions on being enrolled, all members to be clear on the books by October, or they will not be entitled to compete for the cups. The office-bearers were elected as follows:—President, C. Hunter; vice-presidents, W. Hutcheson and J. Lawrie; secretary, G. Smart, Ivy Bank, Carmyle, Glasgow; committee: J. McNicol, J. ## ATTERCLIFFE & DISTRICT C.B.S.

Annual meeting held on Jan. 14 at the Horse and Jockey Hotel. The president, Mr. Havenhand, took the chair. The balance sheet was read and passed as correct, the auditors, Messrs. Havenhand and E. Johnson, mentioning that we had a balance in hand of £3 15s. 6d. We had a discussion on our rules and completely revised them. It was decided to have a stock show on Feb. 11, and Mr. Justice (treasurer) promised to give 2s. 6d. for each class. The election of officers was then proceeded with. Mr. L. Havenhaud was unanimously re-elected president; the members are very fortunate in securing his services for another year, as he is an ideal president and one who does not spare himself to promote the welfare of our society. Mr. G. H. Greenfield also was re-elected vice-president, and Mr. H. Justice as treasurer. A large committee was appointed. The following comprise the committee: Messrs. E. Johnson, F. Johnson, Webhon, Bright, Hollinsworth, Wadsworth, Watson, and Richards. It was decided to again have the club room at the "Horse and Jockey" Hotel for our meeting room for another year, Mr. Justice again offering it us free of charge. A vote of thanks to our chairman for his past and present services ended a very pleasant meeting.—W. RICHINSON, Sec.

We also decided to have a dinner at Rochdale on February 20th, after which the presentation of medals will take place, providing that we get a guarantee of 20; members will be notified in a few days, asking for their decision. We admitted two new members to our ranks, namely, Messrs. Tottle (Frome), and G. Fitton (Oldham), and have heard of another or two for our next meeting. The balance-sheet, showing a nice balance in hand, was passed. A vote of thank to all retiring officers, together with one to our chairman for presiding, brought a pleasant evening to a close.—WM. ADAMS, hon. sec.

HAMILTON CADZOU OAKS O.S.

At a meeting, held Jan. 16, it was decided that a supper be held on Feb. 27 next. All fanciers are invited. A working committee has been appointed, and on the details of the supper being settled, the prices of admission and the place where it will be held will be notified through the Fancy Press. Our society is calling a public meeting of fanciers and friends resident in Hamilton and district for the purpose of receiving suggestions on the following points:—1. Whether it would be in the interests of the society to change the meeting place from the present premises to unlicensed premises. 2. How to increase the usefulness of the society. Time of meeting, 7 p.m. on Feb. 6, at the Lesser Halls, Victoria Halls, Quarry Street. The public meeting will last from 7 p.m. to 8 p.m., after which the enrolment of new members will take place. All fanciers, whether intending members or not, are welcome to attend. The admission is free. The annual business meeting, which was adjourned on Jan. 16, will be held after the close of the public meeting, and if time permits, the election of office-bearers for 1909 and programme of monthly meetings will also come before the meeting. Our accounts have not yet been passed, but we have a substantial balance on hand. Our late show was a financial success, although the entries showed a large decrease on 1907. All prize money was paid out the week after the show, and with the exception of a few specials, everything has been cleared up. Not a single complaint was received, and all birds were correctly returned to exhibitors.—A. CANT, Secretary.

LEICESTER C.B.S.

Annual general meeting held on Jan. 20, Mr. W. Stevens presiding. The balance sheet for 1908 was presented by the secretary, which showed the society to be in a very flourishing condition, there being an increase of over £3 in the treasurer's hands as compared with the corresponding meeting last year. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Sir John Rolleston; chairman, Mr. W. Stevens; vice-chairmen, Messrs. E. B. Hunt and H. Christian; secretary and treasurer, J. A. Tyler, 220, Narborough-rd., Leicester; hon. solicitor, J. T. Hincks, Esq.; hon. auctioneer, Mr. J. H. Tricks; trustees, Messrs. J. Adams and W. Oakey; committee, Messrs. J. Wood, J. Heighton, T. ## DULWICH O.S.

The first meeting of the new committee was held on Jan. 14th at headquarters. Our finance was gone into, and several paid their promised donations, making the prospect much brighter. Mr. Pawley, hon. sec. of the Plumstead and Woolwich C.B.S. was made a member. A very attractive programme was arranged for the year, and the hope was expressed that members would support the fixtures by their attendance. The idea of having two pair shows originated from Mr. Sprules, so that novices who had made mistakes in pairing at the first show could have the opportunity of benefiting by the second. Judges for the members' shows are Messrs. Robson, Gardner and Vale. Lectures will be given by Messrs. Robson, Gardner and Woolhouse, and a cage-making demonstration by Mr. A. Recs, and the washing exhibition by Messrs. Woolhouse and Wall, the former handling the Norwich and the latter the Yorkshires. Date of annual show will be made known later. Meeting nights are fourth Thursday of each month. Fanciers desirous of joining should communicate with the secretary, S. J. KENT, 156, Underhill-rd., E. Dulwich, S.E.

BRADFORD EAST O.S.

The 3rd annual meeting was held on Jan. 12, Mr. H. Peacock, vice-president, in the chair. Mr. J. Farrar gave the treasurer's report, which showed the society was in a sound financial condition, having increased the balance with which it started last year, and this, taking into consideration the heavy expenses incurred in providing staging, etc., for the annual show, was considered highly satisfactory. The report was adopted unanimously. Mr. H. Hill gave the secretary's report and a review of the past year's work, thanking all the officials for their loyal support, and the members for the efforts they had made in response to the appeal for specials for the annual show. The year has been a prosperous one in all respects, and this ought to be an encouragement for us to face the future and do even better than in the past. The enthusiasm which the members have shown in everything they have taken in hand is capable of accomplishing great things. Mr. A. Wilkinson gave the auditor's report, and the following officers were then elected for the ensuing year:—Mr. E. Suddards, president, with a unanimous and enthusiastic vote; vice-presidents, Messrs. W. Cruise, G. R. Rushworth, J. Stobart, G. White; treasurer, Mr. J. Farrar; secretary, H. Hill; assistant secretary, Mr. F. Gelder; auditors, Messrs. W. Laycock and A. Wilkinson. It was decided to hold six members' shows this year for the specials. The following gentlemen were then elected as delegates to represent the society on the Council of the Yorkshire Union: Messrs. W. Cruise, H. Hill, and H. Peacock. With this business the meeting terminated. Fanciers are invited to join the society.—H. HILL, Sec.

WESTERN COUNTIES O.S.

The 49th annual meeeting was held at the Borough Arms, Plymouth, on January 18th. The balance-sheets showed the society to be in a very flourishing condition, there being a balance in hand of £41 10s. 10d. In presenting his report, the hon. sec, Mr. Thomas Pope, pointed out that although 1908 had not been quite so successful financially, yet the W.C.O.S. had great cause for congratulation at the position the society found itself in on the eve of its jubilee. In the subsequent discussion which took place, the members expressed their determination one and all to make the coming year a success, and the annual (jubilee) show a red-letter event. The chairman (Mr. Chas. Dart), in proposing a vote of thanks to the secretaries for their year's work, said that the arrangements both for the club and open shows were carried out without friction, and in the most businesslike and economical manner, and on the proposition of Mr. J. Rowe, seconded by Mr. F. G. Snell, the sums of £2 and £1 were voted to the hon. sec. and hon. assist. sec. respectively as a slight token of their appreciation by the members. Votes of thanks to the chairman, vice-chairman, and auditors were passed, the officers suitably replying. The following were elected as officers for the ensuing year:—President, The Mayor of Plymouth (E. Spender, Esq., J.P.); chairman, Mr. Chas. Dart; vice-chairman, Mr. W. G. French; committee, Messrs. Ryder, Garland, Hoar, Jewell, J. Rowe, Tottle, Snell, Clark, Pridham, Deeble, Lott, White, and Tucker; hon. auditors, Messrs. Spillman and Reed; hon. assistant secretary, Mr. W. A. Dyer; hon. sec. and treasurer, Mr. Thos. Pope, 98, Embankment-road, Plymouth. The annual show will be held in the Corn Exchange on October 19th and 20th.

ROLLERS AT DUDLEY.

The management of this show struck us as being quite out of the usual, and worthy of the highest praise. Exhibitors may always feel sure that, no matter how late their exhibits arrive at Dudley, they will not have to stop at the station all night, for up to 12.15 even the railway officials were quite busy. The Dudley manager of the C.W. Rly. Co. was at the show room twice after 12 o'clock seeing that everything was right. This being Dudley's first attempt with Rollers, they turned up well. For report on other sections see page 63 last week.

CHESTERFIELD.

The Chesterfield F.A. held their annual function on Jan. 23rd, under C.B. Union rules. The Assembly Rooms in the Market Hall, provided the necessary accommodation for the staging of the exhibits, and is of a spacious character, has nice light, and is well ventilated, besides being most centrally situated. The entry came up well, and although a few classes had to be cancelled on account of insufficient support, there were many notable birds present. Yorkshires opened the catalogue, and were voted a choice lot. Norwich contained some "right 'uns," and great praise is due to the exhibitors here. The Mules and Hybrids were really good, Messrs. Colton and Dawn leading with their well-known Redpoll-Bullie, closely followed by Mr. J. Somerfield's superb Yellow-Greenie Can. The British birds captivated greatly. The Bullie staged by Mr. J. Milne was a topper, while Mr. H. W. Axe had on view his noted Greenie. Mr. R. D. Parlett stood on top with a "knock-out" of a Linnet (the Scottish National hero), and Mr. P. H. Wilcock held a whip hand with a magnificent Hawfinch. The Foreign birds gave much tone to the show, and some lovely exhibits were shown. Special prizes for best birds were captured by Messrs. Mitchell and Blackburn, W. Vardy, J. Milne, and H. W. Axe. The committee consists of a band of most energetic and willing workers. The hon. secretaries are Messrs. J. J. Dooley and W. Hartley, both of whom are capital officials, always doing the right thing, and at the right time; they were also courteous to the highest degree. Chesterfield are lucky in having a couple of such enthusiastic fanciers in their midst. Messrs. R. Worne and L. Goucher acted as stewards, and proved themselves experts at the business. Staging was of a very neat order, and every bird could be seen at a glance. Judging was over in good time, and the show was opened promptly. Mr. J. C. Barnes (Sheffield) judged, and gave satisfaction.

TORONTO (Canada) C.B.S.

From the Toronto "Globe" we learn that the sixteenth annual exhibition of the Toronto C. and C.B.S. was held in the banquet hall of the King Edward Hotel on Jan. 1. It was the biggest show of the kind ever held in Toronto, and the quality of the entries was excellent. There were over 400 birds in the room, nearly 100 more than in the exhibition last year. Many prominent bird fanciers visited the show during the day.

Mr. J. Mackenzie won everything in sight among the Scotch Fancies; W. Wylie and W. Brockbank were the lucky ones in the Norwich class, the latter winning the "Canadian Fancier" Cup. In the Crest class Wylie won everything except the Mackenzie Silver Cup, which was won by Mr. J. M. Downer. Mr. Wylie was the winner again in Crest-breds, Mr. Moffat getting second place. Mr. W. N. Naylor won the Lizard class, and Mr. Harvey the Yorkshires, winning the Manchester medal, the second prize and the George Hazen Silver Cup. Mr. J. Bain won the medal for best cinnamon, Yorkshire type, and he was equally successful among the marked Yorkshires. J. M. Downer had the winner of the Norwich type cinnamon, and Mr. J. Goggins the lucky bird in the Green class, for colour. Mr. W. H. Urry came out best among the Mules and Wild Birds. R. H. Gill won the colour-fed class.

Mr. H. S. Tibbs had the best among the Rollers, and he won with a bird he had bred in Canada. Mr. J. Mepham got the Diamond Half medal for second best, and the Simmers prize for third. The Trimble Cup was won again by Mr. Tibbs, and this being his second win, he only has to repeat next year and the cup will be his. The Toronto Canary and Cage Bird Society's cash prizes for members scoring most points went to Mr. R. Harvey, first; J. M. Downer, second, and W. Wylie, third.

AUCHTERARDER, N.B.

Annual show was held on January 23rd, in the Templar Hall. Considering the place of exhibition was so far off the regular run of traffic, and difficult of access, the attendance was remarkable; indeed, so congested was the small hall that it was an uncomfortable experience trying to view the birds, while the staging was too low to permit the lowest tier being seen without necessary stooping. However, Mr. Dow and his committee did everything possible to meet the difficulties that faced them, and succeeded splendidly. Mr. J. F. Dewar judged all varieties, and his awards met with general favour. The Norwich and Border Fancy classes were poorly filled, and the quality was scarcely as good as at former exhibitions. British birds had a capital entry, which included a number of winners belonging to the leading Scotch exhibitors. The selling classes contained a number of real bargains, some of which were claimed for Edinburgh and Dundee exhibitors.

GLOSSOP, HADFIELD AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

First annual show held under C.B.U. rules in Wood's Reading Rooms on Saturday, Jan. 2nd. The first eight classes were somewhat of a failure; they were open to the kingdom, and were all for Lizards; the first six were championship classes and the other two novice classes. All the first six were cancelled, and we were proud to see the novices show the old hands a bit of pluck. Mr. Lee (Castleton), the only outsider, entered two birds, and went away with 1st in class 8 and 2nd in class 7 and three specials; good luck to him. All the remaining classes were open to the district, and some good birds were seen. The show management was in the hands of Messrs. Anderton and Greig. Mr. J. Garner (Hazle Grove) judged and gave great satisfaction. The club cup, to be won by four young birds bred by exhibitor, was won by Mr. C. E. Fisher with a fine team of Lizards. Mr. John Smith ran him hard with a graceful team of Yorkshires.

PRIZE MONEY PAID.

[Will exhibitors who have not received their prize-money please communicate with the respective secretaries at once.]

Halesowen, Spalding, Halifax, Hertford, Bathgate.

A specimen of the special prize-cards given to winners at Bristol F.A. Show reaches us from the secretary, Mr. G. T. H. Maggs. They are really very artistic, and embellished with photographs—president and chairman. We have issued considerably over one thousand of these, says Mr. Maggs, in different colours, for 1st, 2nd, 3rd, 4th, etc., and I have received a great number of letters congratulating our society.

A pleasant feature of Halifax Show was the interest displayed by the local school-children when, on the Saturday morning, about 1,500 of them visited the exhibition, accompanied by their teachers. The Halifax fanciers well deserved the success which attended their efforts; everyone seemed pleased with the display and the management. We were sorry to hear that the assistant secretary, Mr. H. Whitaker, was confined to his room, and on all hands the wish was expressed for his speedy recovery.

Kindly announce in your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS, writes Mr. J. C. Birch, hon. secretary of the Clapham and Dis. C.B.A., that an alteration has been made in the meeting nights of the association from the 1st and 3rd Thursdays to the 2nd and 4th Thursdays in each month. This was arranged to prevent any clashing with the West London Society meeting nights. The society's shows are fixed to be held on the following dates, viz.: Matched pairs, February 13th; first feather, June 26th; and annual, November 13th.

A sample tin of Fox's Egg and Biscuit Food, as advertised in our columns, was sent to our Mr. G. E. Weston to report upon, and he writes: "I have given Fox's Egg and Biscuit Food an extended test, and have no hesitation in pronouncing it excellent. It is put up in most convenient form, is most easily prepared for use, and, best of all, is eaten with obvious enjoyment by one's birds. Being purely and simply eggs and biscuits, fanciers know exactly what they are using, and its high feeding value is attested by the analysis. In a dry state my seed-eating birds (both Mules, British and Foreign) eat it with relish, and no doubt find it a valuable change of diet. My insectivorous birds eat it readily, too. And, needless to say, Canaries devour it eagerly; I should have no hesitation in using it to feed young with."

The financial statement of the Aberdeen O.S. for the year ending January 9th, shows a balance on the right side of £3 8s. 3d. and the officials are to be congratulated on the successful issue of the year's working.

The North London C.B.A. have a very satisfactory balance-sheet for the past season, there being a cash balance of £6 9s. 10d., and total assets £15 14s. 10d. This ending to a good year's work should be gratifying to the popular secretary, Mr. R. P. Harper, and his fellow officials.

I have had so many replies to my advertisement in CAGE BIRDS re two cocks for a good buff hen, writes Mr. T. R. Wallace (Falkirk), that I could not reply to them all. I take this opportunity, therefore, of thanking the applicants through your columns. I may say I had twenty-two replies in all from all parts of the country,

The Tong and Dis. C.B.S., writes Mr. J. Smith, the secretary, intend having a meat pie supper on March 9th, in the Holme Lane Hotel, when the presentation of medals and specials will be made. All fanciers and friends will be welcome. I should like as many as possible to send in their names by the next show date, February 20th.

That long established and very much alive society, the Western Counties O.S., got through a lengthy and attractive programme during the past season, and their balance-sheet, to hand duly audited, shows the members to have the highly satisfactory sum of £41 10s. 10d. on the right side. This must be very pleasing to the officials, and especially the hard-working secretary, Mr. T. Pope, and his assistant, Mr. W. A. Dyer. It is interesting to note that 1909 is the "Jubilee" year of the W.C.O.S., and our Plymouth friends will make every endeavour to celebrate it with a record show.

I have great faith in Mackley's High Condition Food for birds down in condition—birds that look without any flesh—writes Mr. W. Francis (Lowestoft). I give you just one instance, which happened in my own room within the last few days. I had two cocks, a yellow three years old, and a 1908 buff, both very low in condition and health. I thought I was going to lose both. I gave them fresh cages and gave one teaspoonful of this food every day for about ten days. I was surprised today to see these two cocks feed each other when put into a cage together; both are now quite plump and in song. It may help others to equally satisfactory results.

I hear from a friend in Toronto (Canada), writes Mr. J. Bertie (Nottingham), who says they had a very successful cage bird show on New Year's Day; 380 entries, not bad for Toronto. I can just fancy I was there again amongst them, placing the cards at Fouram Hall or at the Dominion Exhibition. I have seen some very creditable birds staged there, especially in Scotch Fancies and Norwich Plainheads. He also writes: "I see by CAGE BIRDS that you had a great show of Crests at Nottingham." If only some of the fanciers out there could see Nottingham Show just once, I guess it would take a little conceit out of them.

The Manchester and N.C.O.S experienced a very busy and successful season during 1908, though a loss made on the annual show has reduced the cash in hand to £24 2s. 2d., a satisfactory "nest-egg," anyway, and one further augmented by medals, staging and other fixtures (value £12) belonging to the Society. The balance-sheet is duly audited, and the lucid manner in which it is set out reflects credit on the work of the secretary, Mr. Lythgoe, and his assistant, Mr. Jones. The Manchester Society has always been noted for the excellent programmes arranged for the benefit of its members, and an exceptionally good one is put forward for 1909.

The January number of "Birds Notes"—the journal of the Foreign Bird Club—is full of interesting and instructive matter, and affords capital reading. Among other articles, is that by Mr. Wesley T. Page, on "The Painted Finch" (which is exquisitely illustrated in colours by Mr. H. Goodchild), that by Mr. Douglas Dewar, I.C.S., on "The Birds of India" (being a lecture delivered before the Indian section of the Royal Society of Arts), and that by Captain G. A. Perreau, F.Z.S., on "Hanging Parrakeets." Mr. H. Goodchild and Mr. H. Willford continue their articles begun in previous issues, while notes on "The Breeding of the Quaker Parrakeet" and "My Latest Aviary" are contributed by Mr. John Cheetham and Mr. H. L. Sich respectively.

We have received a copy of the Rudge-Whitworth Cycle Company's exceptionally attractive 1909 illustrated catalogue (68 pages). In addition to giving full specifications and prices of all Rudge-Whitworths, a very fine half-tone illustration is given of each model, and the pages are also made attractive by the insertion of photographs of well-known actors and actresses. The catalogue describes in detail all the improvements in Rudge-Whitworths, including the patent combined celluloid handlebar covering and grips (the features of which are that the grips, being in one piece with the handlebar, cannot come off), and the brilliant and absolutely rust-proof finish. Patent brakes and variable speed gears are described, as well as the all-steel flush joint frame; the illustration showing the latter in section will be keenly appreciated by all cyclists, as it explains why Rudge-Whitworth bicycles are the strongest, and why it is possible to guarantee them for 10 years. Charts and prices of all Rudge-Whitworth Interchangeable parts, and a great variety of cycle accessories, are included in the catalogue, which is a veritable cyclists' encyclopædia. This valuable book is sent post free to all who may apply for it (mentioning CAGE BIRDS when writing; a postcard will do), to Messrs. Rudge-Whitworth, Ltd., Coventry.

ILLUSTRATED IDEAS

Under this heading we shall illustrate weekly some ideas useful to the bird-keeper. Readers are invited to send us particulars of any novel and practical appliance of use in our hobby, either in cage, bird room or aviary, with a rough sketch of same where possible. Every "Illustrated Idea" used in this column will entitle the sender thereof to a postal order for two shillings and sixpence.

A METHOD OF FIXING PERCHES.

Sent by H. H. Bulcock, "Riversdale," Clitheroe.

An easy method which allows of fixing perches, when required, at different heights, will be found illustrated. You bend a piece of punch bar in the shape of A to B. A fits inside, on cross-bar of cage (at C), a tack dropped through at A, as shown, will hold it. Fix perch, E, in back of cage, at D. Drive a tack through hole in punch-bar at B (or any of the other holes) into perch E. This looks very neat, and answers perfectly, particularly when perches are wanted low down. —H. H. BULCOCK.

A NOVEL SEED TROUGH.

Sent by P. Gent, 32, Wilson Street, Crook, co. Durham.

The illustration shows a seed-hopper which fits into a hole and into the lower stay of the case front (the same as a seed-drawer), and it can be refilled without being removed from the cage, and out of which practically no seed is wasted. It can, of course, be made any size desired, or to fit in an existing drawer hole. The two sides of my own are cut out of pieces of thin but strong wood, 3ins. by 2ins. The wood bottom is 1¼ins. by 2ins., and the wood and (inside) ⅝in. high by (of course) 1¼ins. wide; both must be regulated to fit the hole in the cage front. The front is of glass, so one can see when the hopper wants replenishing, and towards the bottom a slanting piece of wood is fixed in such a position (see the small sketch) as to allow just a fair depth of seed to run into the "mouth" of the hopper. The wood at back (that is, nearest the cage front) runs down to within close distance of this slanting piece of wood. —P. GENT.

I am very pleased to read CAGE BIRDS every week as soon as I get home at night. It is the first paper I get hold of.—J. HILL (Wombwell).

I have taken in CAGE BIRDS from the first number, writes Mr. Wm. Chadwick (Stalybridge), and still look forward to it every Friday.

On receiving my Birthday Number of CAGE BIRDS, I was quite delighted with the many excellent pictures it contained. I consider it the most interesting number you have given us. Of course, I was greatly interested in the painting of the two "Wee Gems," and here, I think, Mr. Norman has fairly excelled his previous efforts in this branch of the Canary family. I consider the yellow cock as near perfection as it is possible to get. The other plates are really beautiful, and must have involved considerable labour, to say nothing of the expense of producing them. I wish CAGE BIRDS a long and prosperous career.—HENRY BENNET (Kelso).

CANARY QUERIES.

Seed Samples.

S.W.—The Canary is just a trifle small in size, but is of good quality, and quite sweet and sound. So long as you can get seed equal to it, you need not trouble about improving upon it. This latter remark also applies to the rape, which is a nice sample of summer rape. It appears to be rather new, and would doubtless improve with a few months proper storage.

Mating a Crest-bred.

Ajax.—You will find it difficult and expensive (comparatively) to buy a really good yellow Crested hen; they are extremely scarce. You had better, therefore, use a buff hen, as good as you can afford, and next year cross in yellow blood from the Plainhead side, say a heavily variegated or green Crest-bred. You should get a young (1908) hen, by all means, and if heavily marked, so much the better.

Will it Breed?

F.W. (Chesterfield).—Certainly, if the bird has recovered from the broken leg, and gets about its perches with freedom, the injury should be no great detriment to its breeding successfully when the proper time arrives. Some birds will naturally take much longer to come in song again after such an accident, but if the general health is unaffected, no special treatment should be necessary to make them come into song. Feed and treat the bird as advised frequently in this column for birds out of song, and give twenty drops of chemical food in the water for a week or two, and a mealworm, if available, four or five times a week; if otherwise healthy, the bird will resume song as soon as the effects of the accident have passed off.

Abnormal Growth.

Veritas.—What you suspect is a growth, is, I am afraid, anal prolapsus. Bathe the part with a fairly strong solution of extract of wych bazel, and return it to its proper position, if possible. If you succeed in returning it, insert a tiny piece of nut-gall ointment, and repeat the operation daily as long as it returns. If you do not at first succeed in returning the protruding part, repeat the bathing twice a day until you succeed. Feed as frequently advised in this column, and add a pinch of Epsom salts to the water as often as seems to be necessary to keep the bowels from getting constipated. Judging from the bareness on the back, I should also suspect the bird was troubled with red-mite. Examine the cage carefully for this pest, and if any are found, see that they are completely eradicated.

The Moult and Wheeze.

C.A.B.—If the birds are still losing feathers, feed and treat them as advised to "H.J.D.," in this issue until the moulting has ceased, giving only the seeds therein advised, and none of the mixture you name. Although it is quite possible that the trouble might originate at the show, as you say, I hardly think this would account for the subsequent wheeziness, if you had no draughts or great fluctuation of heat in your own room. Therefore, you must pay attention to this point, and see that there is no such cause in operation now. Keep the birds in a comfortable place, but not necessarily overheated. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whiskey, ten each of glycerine, and oxymel of squills, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together, every second day for a fortnight, or until the wheeziness has quite disappeared. A piece of fat boiled pork or bacon stuck in the wires will assist a cure.

Definitions.

L.B.H.—"Sib" is a term used to denote birds which are bred on more or less consanguinious line—that is, by mating together birds that are related to each other by blood. The birds bred from such matings are termed "sib-bred," and are specially useful for breeding mules, where light mules are the desired object. "Unflighted" has no reference whatever to an unmated bird. It means a bird of the year that has not had its nestling "flights"—the long quill feathers in the wings, being so-called—extracted. Young Canaries do not naturally shed these feathers until the second moult, and it used to be a common practice to pull them out at the first moult. This practice is not so popular now as it formerly was—and fortunately, I would add. By the bye, CAGE BIRDS ANNUAL is the book you want. It defines all these puzzling fanciers' terms.

Suffy and Wheezy.

H. Harris.—As you say the bird is kept in a warm place, you must see that it is also fairly equable day and night, and not very warm during the day, and correspondingly cold at night. If this is the case, it would be far better to move it to a cooler position, where the heat is constant day and night. Feed him as advised to "P.F.F.," in this issue, except that you give the sponge cake every third day, only, and sprinkle over it a few grains of gold of pleasure seed. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whisky, ten of glycerine, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together, every second day, until the wheeziness is removed. Then alter it and give instead twelve drops of glycerine, ten of syrup of squills, and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence every second day for a week or fortnight.

Breeding for Profit.

Inexperience.—The building you have will only accommodate thirty-five birds at its full capacity, so that by breeding with the birds flying loose, and leaving the young also to fly with the parents all through the season, which is, I presume, your intention, three cock Canaries, and nine hens, with one or two cock Linnets would be quite sufficient for you to start the season with. I would scarcely advise you to add Greenfinches, but if you are particularly desirous to do so, omit one of the Linnets. As you may very probably breed some Mules in this way you will require a fair-sized type of hen, so I should advise you to put in either Norwich or Yorkshire hens, or some of both either clears or very lightly ticked, and German cocks. Remove the young cock Canaries as soon as they are able to do for themselves, and to educate them under a good Roller. Certainly you must cage the Budgerigars separately.

A Diet for Spring.

"Scarlet."—1, Your treatment of the Yorkshire hen that was persistently egg-bound last season was quite the best you could have done for her. There is no reason now why she should not breed successfully this year, without a recurrence of the trouble. Now you have brought her indoors, feed on a plain winter diet for some weeks to come. Plain canary only as a staple, with just a pinch of summer rape given separately twice a week, a morsel of bread and milk or half a teaspoonful of egg-food once a week, not oftener; and twice a week half a teaspoonful of inga. Continue this treatment up to the beginning of March, or a little later if the weather is not very promising, and do not mate her up until the end of March, or beginning of April. When mated, give a pinch of inga every second day until the eggs are laid. 2, Providing the general health is good, and the bird otherwise active and lively, I do not consider that complete loss of voice would be any serious detriment to a bird's fitness for breeding purposes.

Coppy with Cold.

F.Y.—Alter your general treatment of this bird, and give only plain Canary seed in the hoppers as a staple. Give separately, say, in the egg drawer, half a teaspoonful of rape twice a week, and on two other days a pinch of inga until the bowels appear all right, after which stop it and substitute a few grains of hemp. Every second day for a fortnight, give half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with two drops of sherry mixed in it, and a few grains of gold of pleasure seed sprinkled over it. Give a small spray of green food three or four times a week when quite free from frost; at other times, a bit of banana will be much better than apple. Give as much Epsom salts as will cover a sixpence in each two tablespoonfuls of drinking water for three consecutive days, and afterwards give ten drops of glycerine, five each of syrup of squills and dandelion juice, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken together, every second day for a week; and on the alternate days give two drops each of tincture of gentian and tincture of steel. If the bird is not well by that time, repeat the treatment, beginning with the salts, as above.

Renewed Moulting.

H.J.D.—I hope I have interpreted your signature correctly, as I "ha' ma doots," on the point. It would have been very helpful towards elucidating your difficulty, had you said how you kept the birds in the matter of heat—whether you use any form of artificial heat or not. If you do, the cause of the renewed moulting is not far to seek, and lies in your allowing the heat to fluctuate too greatly, and this would need to be carefully avoided in future. Feed now on plain Canary seed only, as a staple, and give separately half a teaspoonful per bird of summer rape twice each week, on two other days the same quantity of hemp, and on each of the other days half a teaspoonful of egg food, or crushed sponge cake, with two drops of cod liver oil emulsion mixed in it. Give a little green food, or a bit of banana as a substitute, three times a week. In the drinking water give twenty drops of chemical food every second day, and on the alternate days four drops of tincture of steel. Continue this until the moulting has stopped, and then gradually reduce the diet to plain Canary seed only, in moderate weather. Certainly, I think the birds will be quite ready for this season's breeding. With ordinary luck they should have quite got over this trouble before the normal breeding season arrives.

Clings to His Hobby.

"Good Old Greenock."—Am very glad to hear the fancy has such an attraction for you, and trust other matters will soon wear a brighter complexion, and that you will succeed well in the coming season. There is no reason whatever why you should not mate the same birds together this year as you did last. Indeed, if they were young birds last year—that is, bred in 1907—and they hit fairly well last year, it will be quite the proper thing to mate them together again this year. Provided your stock is sound and healthy, not previously inbred, and there is no pronounced particular failing running through them all, you might even increase your breeding stock by mating a young cock of No. 1 hen to hen No. 2, and one of her daughters, a young cock of hen No. 2, to hen No. 1, and one of her daughters, and mate the old cock to a young hen from each of last year's hens. This would give you six breeding pairs, and with the above conditions, not very exceptionally close inbreeding; and after this, you might introduce fresh blood next year, if you wished to do so. Let the staple diet be good sound canary seed only for a few weeks longer, with just a pinch of summer rape twice a week; a few grains of hemp twice a week for the cocks, and a few grains of inga instead for the hens; once a week a little egg food, or scrap of bread and milk, and on each of the other days a bit of greenstuff, when no frost is about. Thanks for kind remarks anent CAGE BIRDS.

Repeating Operations.

Novice.—The question of the desirability of mating the same birds this season as you did last is one that only the owner is fully competent to decide, provided of course, that your means allow you to procure fresh stock, if necessary. If the birds were young ones, of the previous season, last year, there can be no objection whatever to mating them again, and if they hit fairly well last year, and produced young quite up to your expectations, you would be quite right in mating the same birds together again, unless you should have among last season's produce unrelated birds which you considered might breed something even better than last year's matings. To a certain extent repeating the same matings all round implies stagnation. Every year you should try to improve upon the previous season's work, unless your stock has reached the absolute ideal of type, which is, I suppose, scarcely likely. Mating the same birds would not tend to decrease the size of produce at all, unless the parents were getting somewhat ancient. To keep up the size, you must avoid in-breeding, have at least one of each pair a fully matured bird, double buff occasionally, and have plenty of size in your stock birds. Attention to these points, and good feeding parents, will put you OK as far as size goes.

Slow Progress.

Another Beginner.—The bird previously advised about was clearly in a very bad condition at the time, so that even this little improvement is satisfactory in the time, especially as the improvement seems to be following a favourable direction. Persevere for a time with the same treatment as regards food as formerly advised, save that instead of giving the egg food every second day, give it now only twice a week, and sprinkle a few grains of gold of pleasure seed over it each time, and twice a week give a few grains only of hemp, or as a substitute for this, give a mealworm four or five times a week. In the drinking water give now as much Epsom Salts as will cover a sixpence for three consecutive days, and afterwards two drops each of tincture of gentian and tincture of steel every alternate day for a week. If the panting is still troublesome, you may follow this with ten drops of glycerine, six of dandelion juice, and two of eucalyptus oil, well shaken in the water, every second day for another week, and then go back to the beginning and repeat the fortnight's treatment. As regards your other question, if the bird is of the strain mentioned, it is undoubtedly a German Roller, the person named being prominently connected with this breed.

Loss of Voice.

P.B.—It is rather doubtful whether the Roller will regain its full original vocal powers. In addition to the diet of canary and rape, give it a half teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake, with two drops of sherry and one drop of cod liver oil emulsion well mixed in it, every second day for a week or so, and give a scrap of watercress on the alternate days. Keep it in a comfortable temperature, quite free from draughts, and it will be best to keep the cage covered over with some light material for a day or two. Before covering, however, give it an inhalation as follows: Put a teaspoonful of tincture of benzoin and twenty drops of eucalyptus oil in a pint mug, fill nearly full of boiling water, stir it all together, and place the mug and cage close together on a table, and cover all over with a shawl or blanket for ten or twelve minutes. Remove the mug, but keep the cover over the cage for a quarter of an hour longer, and keep the light covering over afterwards for a day or two to prevent any chill. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whisky, ten each of glycerine, and syrup of squills, and as much chlorate of potash as will cover a sixpence, every second day for a fortnight, if necessary. A bit of fat boiled bacon stuck in the wires for the bird to peck at will also help it to recover its full voice.

To Erin's Isle.

"White Owl."—The journey you contemplate sending the birds should not occupy any longer time than one to the Highlands, so that if you consulted a time table and despatched the birds by a train timed to reach Liverpool an hour or so in advance of the departure of the Irish boat, practically the same form of packing as you do for Scotland would be sufficient. The booking clerk at your railway station would undoubtedly advise you as to proper train to send by, if you enquired personally a day or so in advance, and explained the necessity for undelayed transit. For the rest, pack the birds in a fair-sized travelling cage in good sound condition, and with a couple of handfuls of canary and rape seed mixed strewn on the floor, but no hemp. Fasten securely on the wires one of the little earthenware pots used in the wicker German travelling cages, or a covered tin drinker may be fixed in, half fill with water and press a piece of sponge in the top part. If properly fixed this will prevent spilling of water, and supply enough for the bird to suck up. Allow the bird to be in the cage an hour or so before being wrapped up, in order to get a little accustomed to picking up seed from the floor and finding the water-pot. Add a piece of bread saturated with water at the time of finally wrapping up. Of course you must see it has a drink at the last moment, and then that the sponge is fixed securely in the top of pot.

Still Moulting.

P.F.F.—I have no doubt whatever about this bird being exposed to draughts in some way. Perhaps it hangs between two doors, or a door and a window, or some such source of draughts. You must first of all see that it is kept where it is perfectly free from draught, and in a fairly equable temperature, and in a living-room it should not be near or over a burning lamp or gas jet. Feed on a mixture of three parts canary to one part summer rape as a staple, and give separately twice a week a few grains of hemp, and every second day until the moulting is stopped, half a teaspoonful of crushed sponge cake with two drops of sherry and one drop of cod liver oil emulsion, well mixed, in it. Three or four times a week give a little green food, or a bit of banana as a substitute. In the drinking water give twenty drops of whisky, ten of oxymel of squills, and two of oil of eucalyptus, well shaken together, every second day for a fortnight; and on the alternate days give four drops of tincture of steel. If the feathers have ceased dropping by this time, discontinue the steel and give instead twenty drops of Chemical Food every second day for a week or two. Stop the first-named mixture as soon as the huskiness has quite disappeared. From your description I should say the bird is a Norwich Plainhead, but cannot say definitely without seeing it. If it has unusually long and dense plumage on the head somewhat over-reaching the eyes it would be a crest-bred.

The Mating of Stock.

Answered by Mr. J. H. Payne.

Tam-o'-Shanter.—I have no hesitation in advising you to pair the son to his mother, as I gather from your letter that as regards points they "hit," and this, of course, is of vital importance; as is also the fact that they are both strong and healthy. You will, of course, get whole greens and heavily marked birds, but as you say you want type and quality without any regard to colour, then this will be a minor matter to you. I should advise you next year to introduce some clear blood, or you will get your green so firmly fixed that it will take you some time to properly break it up.

BRITISH BIRDS, MULES AND HYBRIDS.

Linnet Ailing.

W. Coates.—The particulars you give are too meagre to be much of a guide. I do not like your method of feeding (see recent answers I have given on this point). In the stock mixture, canary and teazle should certainly be included. The other seeds are good given now and again. Let the bird have a feed of maw seed (a small teaspoonful) daily; not mixed amongst its other seed. As medicine give the following for 24 hours: In two tablespoonfuls of drinking water dissolve as much crystals of sulphate of soda as will lie upon a shilling, and stir in a small teaspoonful of good brandy. Over the next twenty-four hours give half the quantity of soda and brandy in the same quantity of water. Tempt the bird to eat by offering thistle, dandelion, lettuce, and gold of pleasure seeds, mixed. Keep in a room with a just comfortable temperature while ailing; not in an unheated place. In conclusion, don't mix up questions (see rules), as this one went first to our Canary specialist.

Bramblefinch-Chaffinch Hybrids.

Bramblefinch.—I don't suppose it is impossible to breed Hybrids between Bramblefinch and Chaffinch in a cage. But I certainly think a garden aviary, if only a small one, likelier to bring success. You seem to have the opportunity of erecting one, and I think you would be well advised to do so. Hybrids have been bred between both Chaffinch cock mated to hen Bramblefinch, and cock Bramblefinch to Chaffinch hen, so you can try either way. The trouble is to get the young reared, if any eggs hatch out. It is more or less doubtful whether either of the above hens would rear young to maturity in captivity. Thus you would be reduced to finding a foster-parent. A good feeding hen Canary would answer for this. The lady who has bred many examples of this cross took the eggs out of the nests in her aviaries, and put them in the nests of birds—Tits, Robins, Hedge Sparrows, etc.—in the grounds of her house. The Tits especially she found excellent foster-parents. The young were taken at a suitable age, of course, and then hand-fed. Everyone, unfortunately, cannot do this. You would have to rely on the ordinary foods available to fanciers, supplementing them with a good insectivorous food with plenty of live ants' eggs mixed among it. You would be better assured of success if you had one pair only together. If you buy the 1909 "Annual," you will find therein a photograph of a very suitable aviary.

Mating Up a Linnet.

S. A. Brough.—A Linnet which has not been house-moulted will often breed Mules all right, but I am a consistent advocate of house-moulted birds. My own experience has afforded me ample ground for this; and I always endeavour to speak from experience, and not from what other people say. One of the best possible hens you could get to mate with your Linnet would be a young (1908) bird of Norwich type—that is, stoutly built in body, and with a thick neck and broad head. Avoid a hen with a thin head—like a sharpened lead pencil. If you can get a yellow ben possessing these necessary points, then she will be an ideal bird; but a good buff hen will throw fine Mules, though probably not so good in colour and quality. If you are not smitten with the craze to produce light Mules, then choose a hen heavily green marked—what is known as a heavily variegated bird. From such a mating you would get handsome, shapely Mules, hardy, and fine songsters. The simplest way to mate muling couples is to use a cage known as the "double-breeder"—not less than 36 inches long (my own are 40 inches). This is divided into two compartments—a wired slide down the centre separating them. Put the hen Canary in one side, and the cock Linnet in the other, the slide between. They can see each other, and so get "acquainted." When the Linnet is in breeding condition, his beak will be blue in colour and he will be singing stoutly, and no doubt feeding the hen through the wires of the partition. When the hen commences carrying nesting material about in her beak, then you can let them run together. If you know nothing of breeding procedure, then you should certainly read "Canary Breeding for Beginners" (from this office, 7d.), which will tell you all about it.

About a Robin.

No Nom-de-Plume.—The best house cage for a Robin is a box-pattern one about 18 inches long by 14 high by 9 or 10 wide, fitted with food, etc., vessels and perches as described in the reply given "Amateur" last week. The Redbreast is an insectivorous bird, like the Nightingale, though it is true he will thrive in captivity on a plainer, "coarser" dict. I feed my own Robin, which sings grandly, on the same lines as any other small softbills. Try this stock food: powdered Osborne biscuit, four parts; best ants' egg, and dried flies, two parts each; powdered silkworm pupæ, one part; meat meal, half part, by measure. Take the quantity required of this, and mix it just crumbly moist with grated raw carrot, or finely chopped lettuce, watercress, or chickweed (use young leaves only), or cold boiled potato, varying it frequently and adding a little water (but only a few spots) if necessary. "Bobbie," however, likes a few seeds—canary mostly—now and again. You could buy a good stock-food, ready made up, from many advertisers using our columns (possibly at local bird-shops, or bird-food dealers), and add to it grated carrot (sufficient to just damp it), and now and again half a finely minced hard boiled egg. That would make up a very fair dietary. You could add mealworms, small garden worms now and again, black-beetles when you can get them, and other suitable live-foods. "Bobbie" likes a few ripe berries and a little fruit, too.

Brevities.

Sex and Song (Sacco).—(1) Yes, there are certainly both large and small cock Goldfinches, and plenty of cocks hard to tell from hens. If your bird (No. 2) is a dense glossy black over the skull, and has an under-blaze which extends back past the eye (or up to the far edge), then it is a sure cock. (2) They sing, and sing well, when steady; but often want a lot of taming—they sulk.

A Hen Mule (G.S.).—She is badly troubled with red mite. Treat exactly as advised "Miss Bull" last week. Possibly the cage is an old one and has never been entirely washed, say with hot soap-suds, if a wire one. All cages want thoroughly cleansing, in some suitable manner, at intervals.

Diet for Fresh-caught Linnets (Reader).—No doubt you would see and act upon the reply given "Jack P." last week. As regards the sex, note reply to "Dominie" in this issue.

Linnet Mule's Sudden Ailment (Peg Windsor).—Your bird must have had a "stroke" or "fit" of some kind, and you could have done nothing for it beyond dipping its head for a second in cold water, and, if it pulled round, stirring a small teaspoonful of good brandy into two tablespoonfuls of drinking water.

The Best Hens (A.J.S.N.).—If you are going in for dark Mule breeding, then hens of the type recommended "S. A. Brough" this week cannot well be beaten, either for Goldfinch or Linnet; and they are not difficult to obtain. If you want to stand a chance of light Mules, then pink-eyed hens of Yorkshire type (clear or ticked, and bred from a clear strain) would afford you this, and be fairly reasonable in price. No; we have not such a book.

Two Points (R.H.W.).—(1) Hybrid is the correct name for all birds bred between two birds of different species. "Mule" is merely a fancier's word, and it is usually applied to Hybrids having a Canary as one of its parents. (2) The solution is probably that your Linnet is not in breeding condition; it is very, very early yet. When he feels the "wine of love" coursing through his veins, his attitude towards the hen Canary may be vastly different. See other replies as to feeding.

(Owing to unavoidable circumstances Mr. Weston has had to leave several questions unanswered until next week, when all will be dealt with.—EDITOR)

FOREIGN BIRDS.

Grey Parrot Feeble.

M. S., Glasgow.—There is not the least doubt the unwholesome dietary is alone responsible for the bird's enfeebled state. Of course, if you stop the milk sop and cream at once, the bird may be starved, but you must, as soon as possible, wean it therefrom, or its life will be a very short one. The staple diet should be a seed mixture of Canary, oats, wheat, dari, hemp, and sunflower seeds; well mix, and keep a supply continuously in the cage. The following items are all wholesome, and should be ample to supply a varied diet—ripe fruit, such as it will take, plain biscuits, nuts in variety, crust of household bread, and boiled potato (unseasoned). A crust of dry toast may also be given, as also may occasionally sponge or Madeira cake, in strictly limited quantities. Cuttlefish and grit must be regularly supplied. Boiled maize is permissible to a bird long accustomed to a soft diet, but such should only be temporary, the above dietary being ample. You must stop at once bread and butter, cream, meat, and table scraps of all kinds; also leave off the milk sop as quickly as you can without starving the bird. In conjunction with the above diet, continue the use of the fluid magnesia, chemical food and brandy and water as directed in previous reply.

Parrot Pulling Feathers.

A. de C. D.—I take it you have a Blue-fronted Amazon, and you may take it that animal food, tea, coffee, milk slops, and general table scraps are very unwholesome food for a Parrot of this species. Twice a week, so long as its voidings do not become watery, give it half a teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in a tablespoonful of water, giving no other liquid on these days, till this has been consumed. For some time to come well colour the drinking water with Parrish's Chemical Food. I prefer the following seed mixture: equal parts of Canary, oats, wheat, dari, maize, hemp and sunflower seeds, which I well mix, keeping a supply continuously in the cage. In addition to ripe fruit, you can supply nuts in variety, plain biscuit, dry, unseasoned boiled potato and carrot. I should also lightly spray it with chilled water twice a week; it will take no harm from this if done at mid-day, and is carefully kept out of draught till dry. Recovery will not be rapid, but thus treated it should gradually improve. I do not believe in destroying birds unless under very exceptional conditions, but after being in this condition for some time, recovery must be slow. I shall be interested to hear how the bird progresses.

Quail Pecking its Feet.

Fieldfare.—From your description—"plumage tight as wax; bird apparently well"—there can be nothing seriously wrong with its foot. Have you examined it to see if there is a thorn in it? If not, do so, and if you can find no trace of such, or swelling, or dirt clogged joints, you will then be fairly safe in assuming there is nothing the matter with it, but that the actions which surprise you are the demeanour of a particular bird. I have absolutely no data to go upon as to the bird being ailing in any way, and again in this kind of weather you cannot do anything in the way of fomentation with a bird out of doors. Your treatment is very liberal and satisfactory, and you can be quite assured that if anything seriously was wrong, the bird would soon get into poor condition. Keep it under observation; if it should begin to fall off in any way, repeat query at once, with full details. Let them have a few lettuce leaves and other green stuff whenever you can get it sound and free from frost.

Parrot Losing Feathers.

H. Harford.—You do not state how you have been dieting and treating this bird. Read the replies on treating Grey Parrots in this issue; you will find full diet given, and note carefully warning against slops and table scraps. I should put it on a course of Parrish's chemical food, and also lightly damp a crust of household bread, piece of plain biscuit, or something similar, and dust it with flowers of sulphur. Give this daily for a while. Note the following:—For running at the nostrils, spray them with diluted glyco-thymoline, and continue till running ceases. For running at the eyes, either bathe with a warm decoction of camomile flowers or with Rosewater and zinc solution (obtain the latter from your chemist.) Keep the bird strictly out of draught, yet not in a corner of the room where the atmosphere is stagnant. If you would give me particulars as to how you have been feeding and treating, I could help you further.

Cockatell Pulling Feathers.

Ford.—Put bird at once on a simpler diet. Canary, white and spray millet, with a few oats, greenfood, piece of ripe apple, pear, or banana, grit, cuttlefish, and water are all these birds require to keep them fit and healthy. If sunflower seed is given let it be in strictly limited quantities. I should put in the drinking water for one day one teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia, and repeat this every fourth day; in between, that is, when not giving the magnesia, put one teaspoonful of Parrish's chemical food into its daily supply of drinking water. Continue the treatment till the bird is in good condition again. Examine its plumage, and if there are any parasites, spray it every other day with quassia solution, keeping it strictly out of draught till dry.

Grey Parrot's Loss of Feathers.

A. Hardwell.—You will find correct diet given in other replies. However, you had better continue the boiled maize for a time, and well dust same with flowers of sulphur regularly for a time. Note: The boiled maize only keeps fresh one day, and the food vessel must be kept strictly clean. Twice a week, that is, so long as its excreta does not become watery, put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's magnesia in the drinking water, and on other days the same quantity of Parrish's chemical food. Let the bird have a liberal supply of such ripe fruit as to favours. Note the warning to other correspondents re slops, table scraps, etc. From the feathers I take it your bird is an Amazon; if so, a little boiled maize daily for a time would help. Treat as above, and report progress in, say, two or three weeks' time.

Almost Bare of Feathers.

A Reader.—Am afraid your chemist is behind the times: quassia solution is a very old remedy. It is not for the bird to drink, but simply for the spraying of the plumage and skin, which it makes distasteful and bitter. But with so bad a case as your bird you will have to persevere. The chemical food is to be put into the bird's drinking water, and make it the colour of pale port wine. Also give it a little boiled maize daily and well dust this with flowers of sulphur. For one day in lieu of the chemical food make the drinking water saline with Epsom salts. A metal drinker should not be used when giving drugs. You have evidently had a confirmed feather eater palmed off on you; however, it will probably greatly improve, but such improvement will be but slow, and there is nothing to do but persevere with the treatment. Report progress a month hence. There are several other replies in this issue which should help you.

Bird-room and Outdoor Aviary.

G.M.O.—In the first place Budgerigars, Ribbon and Zebra Finches, Bengalese, White Java Sparrows, Long-tailed Grassfinches, and Serins in variety would breed in your 2ft. cages; but I must warn you that foreigners do not breed with the same regularity and precision as Canaries, though some species are very prolific. You are quite right; Budgerigars will winter out of doors, and usually do better when kept out of doors all the year round than under any other conditions. Any weatherproof construction will suffice that gives them the accommodation of the usual fowl pen—viz., shelter shed and covered run and open flight. But the shelter shed should have a window (covered with netting on the inside) sufficiently large to well light it. In other words, Budgerigars are as hardy as Pigeons, but they must be protected from draughts. There are two small books published at this office, viz., "Foreign Birds for Beginners" and "Budgerigars and Cockateels," 1s. 7d. and 7d. each, post free, respectively, which you should get.

Green Parrot Ailing.

New Reader.—By all means still give Paddy rice, but also give the following mixture: equal parts of wheat, dari, hemp, maize and sunflower seed; also ripe fruit, nuts, plain biscuits, such green food according to season as it will take; keep a piece of cuttlefish in its cage, and also supply grit and water regularly. By all means let it have a bath, and if it will not bathe spray it with chilled water, but keep it carefully out of draught till dry. For one day only make the drinking water saline with Epsom salts; follow this by a course of chemical food, putting in sufficient of the chemical food to make the drinking water the colour of pale port wine, and continue this for a month at least. It probably was improperly fed before coming into your possession, but treat as above and there should soon be an improvement. If you read the replies to Parrot queries regularly, distinguishing between Greys, Amazons and Alexandrines or Ringnecks, you should gain much insight as to properly treating your bird.—Note.—A healthy bird is better without drugs.

Grey Parrot Wheezing.

R. Watson.—You do not say how you are feeding the bird. Do not give tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food. If you refer to other replies you will find the correct diet given. Most Parrots will readily eat a piece of plain biscuit; any plain variety will do. Soak into a piece half a teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia, and let it have this every other day for a fortnight, though if its excreta becomes watery, you must stop it for awhile. I should offer the ipecacuanha mixture in a spoon daily for a time first thing in the morning; the bird will then be thirsty and drink it readily. At other times during the day give drinking water well coloured with Parrish's chemical food. Providing its thirst is not abnormal, the drinking water can be left in cage during the day, but should be removed when cage is covered up for the night. If it takes too much, let it have a good drink three or four times a day. At the first sign of running at the nostril, use the glyco-thymoline, and continue its use till the running ceases. If the symptoms should become more pronounced, repeat query.

Distempering an Aviary.

Jacko.—I do not consider it safe to use these distempers, while the birds are in the aviary. Budgerigars are inquisitive and nibble at everything, and if it did not kill it would undoubtedly prove very unwholesome and produce ill-health. What I should advise is, to use ordinary distemper (in fact, limewash), and to do only one wall at a time. I should not do it at this juncture; it would be almost weeks drying; in fact, I question if it would properly dry till spring, and the birds would get their plumage into a most unsatisfactory condition. I consider the better time to do this work is in the autumn, when the moult starts. The birds could then be put in a box or case for a couple of days, and the work done thoroughly. Then any of the distempers on the market can be used with safety if thinly put on. Of course, there is no comparison for effect between distemper and limewash, the former giving very pleasing effects if colours are well chosen. Of course, you can do the work in sections at the present time, if you can secure rapid drying; otherwise the birds would have damp quarters for some time, and damp is far worse than cold for the birds.

Parrot with Fits.

W. S. S.—Twice a week, so long as its excreta does not become watery, put one teaspoonful of Dinneford's Magnesia in the drinking water (two tablespoonsful). In addition to the seed mixture give the following (all of which are wholesome), so as to vary the diet: ripe fruit, nuts in variety, plain biscuits, boiled potato and other vegetables, providing they are unseasoned. If it appears to require a stimulant, a few sips of weak brandy or whisky and water occasionally will be helpful. The bird must be kept warm and quiet, not left altogether alone; but avoid undue excitement for it. I prefer the following seed mixture: Two parts each Canary and oats, and one part each wheat, dari, hemp, and sunflower; well mix, and keep a supply continuously in cage. Stop giving the bone, and instead keep a piece of clean cuttlefish-bone continually in cage, within easy access of the bird. Do not give any tea, coffee, or milk slops, table scraps, or any kind of animal food. If you notice one of the attacks coming on, 3 grains of bromide of potassium dissolved in a little syrup will probably give relief. The same may be given with advantage after an attack, once the bird is fairly recovered. I take it the bird is still strong; if not, on the days you do not give the magnesia well colour the drinking water with Parrish's Chemical Food. Shall be interested to hear of the bird's progress.

Aviary for Budgerigars, etc.

Birds.—As I read your sketch, I take it the flight is in front of shed; a decidedly better position would be for it to extend along wall to the right of shed, if you could make it the extra length to account for the decreased width. For Budgerigars, etc., growing plants are no good, and the kind in yours are not safe for Finches. The following may be permitted: willow, elder, red and black currant, euonomyous, wild clematis (traveller's joy), rambler roses, and any kind of fruit trees; firs, conifers, such as arbor vitae are also permissible, and bamboos make good cover. For Budgerigars keep the ground sown with grass, wheat, oats, rape, maize, etc. You must make up your mind to either keep Parrakeets or Finches; the two cannot be mixed with safety. I should rather advise you to go in for Yellow Budgerigars Get good ones, two pairs for a start, and each pair from a different source; then you will have unrelated birds, by mating the progeny of the respective pairs. A pair of Rosellas would agree with them, and ultimately breed, as would also a pair of Cockateels, which will thrive on the same diet. Put up at least a dozen husks and suitable nesting-boxes, which must have concave bottoms for Parrakeets. The above would all agree, and thrive out of doors, all the year round. You could also put in a pair of Red-crested Grey Cardinals; these I have always found able to look after themselves, even with Parrakeets. If you make up your mind to have Finches, repeat query, and I will give list.

Converting a Greenhouse, etc.

Sirdar.—The chief disadvantage of a greenhouse as an aviary is its variable temperature, viz., extremes of heat and cold; but providing you can exclude damp and draught and at the same time secure proper ventilation, your houses should answer well. Do not glaze the roof of the potting shed; put in a couple of skylights and one or two side sashes, so as to secure plenty of light, but do not have a whole glass roof for choice. If you could add to the potting shed an open wire netting flight, it would add to the usefulness, attractiveness, and enjoyment of the aviary. I cannot take the risk of advising anyone to keep Greys, Amazons, and the larger Parrots together unless the aviary be a huge one. The following would agree well together: Budgerigars, various Lovebirds, Rosellas, Redrumps, Cockateels, Mealy Rosellas, and Stanley Parrakeets—a very beautiful series, most of which would undoubtedly breed if provided with sufficient husks, logs or small barrels. As to the greenhouse, cover the top half of roof—the slope is undoubtedly 9ft. long—and of this cover the top 5ft. with roofing felt the entire length; with these precautions your aviaries should prove a great success. In the winter don't attempt heat, merely a comfortable warmth. In the greenhouse you could have Gouldian and Parrot Finches, Long-tailed and Rufous-tailed Grassfinches; while Java Sparrows, Pekin Robins, Varied Lorikeets (I find these harmless with Finches), Superb, Scarlet, and Tricolor Tanagers, and a small host of Common and Green Avadavats, Zebra, Grey, Orange-cheek, and St. Helena Waxbills. If I have not made all clear repeat query.

Birds for an Indoor Aviary.

J. Joyce.—In the first place I should certainly advise you to get my booklet "Foreign Birds for Beginners," 1/1 post free, from this office; there are many things described therein which you would find very helpful, and save you possible loss. As to quantity, it depends entirely for what purpose you intend to keep them; if for breeding, then only two or at most, three pairs; but if for effect only, and as pets, then from 15 to 20, according to size, might be accommodated. If for breeding, try pairs of Zebrafinches, Zebra Waxbills, and Ribbon Finches, putting up six or eight boxes, cocoa-nut-shell and rush nests. If you keep merely a series, I should still put up the nests, rather more than there are pairs of birds, and take your chance of a stray brood. The following pairs would make a handsome and pleasing series:—Green and Common Avadavats, Zebra, Grey and St. Helena Waxbills, Zebra and Ribbon Finches, and Silverbills. Diet: Canary, white and spray millet, green food, grit, ripe fruit as in season (such as apple, pear, banana), cuttlefish and water for drinking and bathing. For these small ornamental Finches nothing equals grass flowers (grass in the ear), when it can be obtained free from frost and not sodden with wet. Some good, gritty sand (river or sea) is the best for aviary bottom—a sod of turf is much appreciated by the birds as also is any kind of non-poisonous foliage that is infested with green-fly or other plant lice. The above are all hardy when they have been over a few months, but need a little care when they first come over. Slightly colouring the drinking water with chemical food is a help at this time, or if there be signs of constipation making the drinking water just saline with Epsom salts for one day should put matters right. Draughts must be avoided.

POST MORTEMS.

Mr. J. North, 435, Oxford Road, Reading, will examine cage birds for a fee of 1s. 6d. each bird; for a reply direct, 2s. 6d.; analysis, 21s. Subjects for post-mortem examination must be sent packed in a box direct to J. North, with fee. Any sent to the office of this paper will be thrown away, and if a fee is enclosed the loss will be the sender's.

Bullfinch (H. Scott).—Chronic disease of liver, then acute inflammation involving the lungs. It is a common disease amongst Finches in cages, but is not necessarily infectious, although the thorough cleansing of the cages would be expedient.

GENERAL.

Answered by the Editor.

The secretary intimated that he hoped to almost double the membership during the ensuing year. It was decided to overhaul the rules at the next meeting and have them thoroughly up-to-date. A vote of thanks to the chairman terminated the meeting.—D. KAY, Sec.

TORBAY O.S. (Paignton).

Annual general meeting held at Newman's room on January 18th, when Mr. J. Webber presided over a moderate attendance. The secretary's report and balance-sheet were accepted as read, while the rules remain unaltered. The show fixtures for 1909 include a first feather show on July 7th, and the open show October 27th, both the Badminton and Public Halls to be engaged for the latter. Mr. A. N. ## ALNWICK AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

First annual general meeting, held in the Temperance Hotel, on January 13th, Mr. A. Moir, chairman, presiding. Mr. W. A. Broadley, hon. secretary, read the annual report, which gave a resume of the work of the society during its first year. He also reported that Mr. R. Forster Rennison, owing to his vocation being now away from Alnwick, had resigned the secretaryship. Mr. Rennison was entitled to the best thanks of the members, he having come especially from Berwick at his own expense to judge the birds at their table show for Canaries. The hon. treasurer, Mr. T. R. Ternent, submitted the balance-sheet, showing a sum of £1, 5s. 3d, which was considered very satisfactory. The report and balance-sheet were unanimously adopted. The election of officers resulted as follows:—President, Mr. R. K. Malone; vice-presidents, Capt. Howe and Mr. A. H. Tate; chairman, Mr. M. Swan, jun.; vice-chairman, Mr. W. Landers; secretary, Mr. W. A. Broadley; assistant secretary, Mr. T. M. Tate; treasurer, Mr. H. P. Staig; auditors, Messrs. E. Beswick and W. Landers; committee, Messrs. W. Straughen, T. Wake, A. ## YORKSHIRE C.C OF IRELAND CHALLENGE CUP.

SIR,—In reply to your correspondent who signs himself "William Henry," I will be glad if this gentleman will give his proper name and address, so that I may be able to answer his questions through your paper.

CARDIFF & DISTRICT FANCIERS TRIP TO THE PALACE.

SIR,—Will you kindly inform your readers that a party is being formed to visit the Palace Show on February 6th, by the early morning train, at a fare and a quarter (16s.) for the roturn journey from Cardiff. Anyone desirous of availing themselves of joining the party may obtain particulars from

THE DISQUALIFICATIONS AT BATHGATE SHOW.

SIR,—I was pleased, but not surprised, to see by your report of Bathgate Show that some of our well-known British bird exhibitors were disqualified for alleged faking and staining, etc. All credit is due to the judges who are not slow to expose such practices. Can something not be done to suspend those caught at the work? I would like to see the S.B.B. and M.C. take it in hand.

BRITISH BIRD FANCIER.

THE ALLEGED STAINED LINNET AT BRI TOL F.A. SHOW.

SIR,—In justice to my stewards, Messrs. Ind and Lovell, and Mr. Brown (C.B.U. representative at Bristol Show) I must give the most emphatic denial to Mr. Birchley's statement that a "local enthusiast" "aided" me in suspecting his Linnet, as no one spoke to me about the matter until after I had finished judging, and my slip was handed in. I never allow anyone to assist me in my work wheu judging, and had a local enthusiast ventured to offer his aid in this matter of Mr. Birchley's Linnet, he would very quickly have been told to mind his own business. It is most unfair of Mr. Birchley to make such reckless statements.

C. A. HOUSE.

SIR,—There is one point in Mr. Birchley's letter calling for notice from me. The letter from me confirming tclegram, which Mr. Birchley states he received "about three weeks later," was written and posted by me the day after. The letter further notified him that the bird was detained pending an appeal, should he wish to make one.

G. T. H. MAGGS, Hon. Sec., Bristol F.A.

SHOW BIRDS & MISSING CLAWS.

SIR,—Mr. Bryden asks for my opinion on this subject. I consider no bird should be thrown out of competition because of a missing claw, or even two or three. A claw is a very minor part of a bird, and the highest number of points allowed in any standard, known to me, is 5 points for legs; feet, and claws. The absence of claws is generally the result of an accident, and whilst birds should be penalised to some extent by reason of the imperfection, I do not agree that they should be thrown right out of competition.

C. A. HOUSE.

SIR,—I am a somewhat interested party in the above matter, and must say that I fail to follow Mr. Bryden in his argument from any point of view. Let him be an exhibitor of Canaries, British or foreign birds; I am not so much interested in the matter as far as Canaries are concerned as I am in the case of British or Foreign birds, and I consider if the proposition suggested by Mr. Bryden was carried out it would do much harm to the Fancy. As to your correspondent's statement that it is likely to lead to "faking," I cannot agree with him, and I would like to ask our friend how many birds are hatched with twisted claws, as he suggests, to the hundreds, nay thousands, that through some slight accident have lost a claw, or perhaps through such terrible complaints as gout, and excess of uric acid in the blood, that have caused the feet to swell, with the ultimate loss of one or two toe-nails. To follow out one correspondent's argument would, in my estimation, break the hearts of many of our younger fanciers, who are the ones we want to encourage, for they may have ever such good birds, that perhaps through sheer lack of knowledge or means of giving them suitable cage fronts, have pulled off a single toe-nail just at the beginning of the show season. Then, again, we will suppose a fancier has the pluck to pay a big price for a bird, and through some unknown reason this bird loses a nail. Does Mr. Bryden mean to say—condemn that bird as useless, though otherwise a typical specimen? I think that in such cases as I here mention the owner would receive the sympathy of thousands of readers. Our specialist judges to-day are too keen on these matters to let them pass unnoticed, and if a bird has a missing claw or claws, their awards are made accordingly. When Mr. Bryden has read this letter I hope he will see the force of my argument, and not try to burden the Cage Bird Fancy with any such laws, for there are quite enough obstacles now set in our road without making more.

SIR,—In my opinion a show bird with a missing claw should be allowed to compete and also take a prize, if it merits one in all other points, and all the more to its honour if it does so. Let me give an instance. A friend of mine last summer reared a Red-backed Shrike. He placed it in a cage without any thorns or nails in, thus leaving it no place on which to fix its food while it tore it to pieces. Consequently it held its meat, etc., in its claws while it tore it up with its beak. In so doing, I believe, it took off one of its claws by accident. A Red-backed Shrike is a most difficult bird to manage. Suppose this Shrike is shown in a class in which I am also showing a common Hedge Sparrow, and it lies between these two birds for a prize. The Shrike is by far the best in condition, but it is minus a claw. Should this prevent it taking promier honours? In my opinion, no. Now suppose two birds are of equal merit in all other points, but one is minus a claw. Then let this bird take a back seat. I believe a well-known exhibitor is this season exhibiting a bird with two claws missing, but any exhibitor knows he is showing such at a disadvantage, but if he wins with it all the more to his credit. Some of the letters on this subject sound to me as if they came from disappointed exhibitors. Of course all birds do not lose their claws by accident. I know an instance of one being hatched minus a claw.

WILLIAM P. BELL.

A NEW SOCIETY FOR DARWEN AND DISTRICT.

SIR,—An effort is at last being made to establish a society on Darwen and district. It is to be hoped that all fanciers will rally together in one combined attempt to make the effort a huge success. All interested persons should write me at once.

JAS. DAVISON.

STAVELEY AND DISTRICT CAGE BIRD SOCIETY.

SIR,—Thanks to your valuablo paper, CAGE BIRDS, we have now started a society for this district, with a radius of seven miles, and we shall be very pleased to hear from any fanciers in the district. Entrance fee is 1s. and the subscription 4d. per month. The meeting nights are the second Saturdays in each month, at the "Speedwell Inn," at 8 o'clock prompt. The president is Mr. T. Kay, the treasurer Mr. A. Dodd, assistant secretary Mr. H. Smith, 88, Arkwright Town, secretary C. Brammall, 31, Railway Cottages, Staveley, near Chesterfield.

A SAD CASE AT WOLVERHMAPTON

SIR,—I have undertaken, on behalf of the widow of our late secretary, Mr. F. Howes, to dispose of the small stock of birds, in which he took such a pride. There are only about 25 birds, all Yorkshires, and many of them winners. Also the breeding stock, show cages, etc. I should be pleased if you would draw the attention of readers to the advertisement in the Yorkshire column. Our late friend was a working man, and for years had to contend with very hard times. His widow and three little children are totally unprovided for, so that the money obtained from the sale of the birds will be a great help in their present need.

F. J. WEAVER,

THE GRAND UNITED METROPOLITAN SHOW.

SIR,—I wish to remind the secretaries of all London fur and feather societies that a meeting will be held on Tuesday, February 2nd, at 8.30 p.m., at "The Raglan," Aldersgate Street, E.C., to discuss the arrangements for the 1909 G.U.M. Show. The secretary and sub-committee of the December Show will be able to state, in brief, that tho 1908 venture resulted in a balance to the good, and furthermore, that all prize-winners at present approached have presented the monies due to them to the committee, to form the nucleus of a guarantee fund for 1909. I have just heard that one of the London societies' separate shows has ended with a deficit of over £20, notwithstanding the fact that no member had a farthing of prize-money. This is in accordance with the result of most of the shows conducted under the bad old "separate show for each society" method. "Come, secretaries," say the two societies who have made experiment, "you are invited to join hands in a newer and better scheme, attend Tuesday's meeting, come prepared to criticise if you like, but at least come and have a chat with us." Shall we stick to the G.U.M. show? There can be but one answer, I think.

WILLIAM RICE.

LIVERPOOL AMALGAMATED SHOW

SIR,—Will you allow me to reply to the letters of "Puzzled One" and "Amalgamated" in your issues of the 9th and 16th inst. The Garston Bird B.A. is not dead, and that the show which should have been held on January 1st, 1909, did not take place is not due to any fault of mine. I shall take care to bring this matter up for discussion at our next meeting, February 17th. In the meantime allow me to personally express my regret that cause for annoyance and ill-feeling has arisen.

J. F. D. ALEXANDER, Hon. Sec.

A NEW SOCIETY FOR STOCKTON HEATH AND DISTRICT.

SIR,—A meeting of fanciers in the district of Stockton Heath was called by Messrs. J. Bretherton and T. F. Moss, on Jan. 19th, at 5, Farrell Road, to discuss the advisability of starting a society. A fair number of fanciers attended, and it was decided that we form such a society, and call it the Stockton Heath and District Ornithological Society. We are fortunate in securing Dr. S. J. Parker as president, and several local gentlemen as vice-presidents. The society fixed its radius at five miles, and its yearly subscription at 3s. A hearty invitation is given to cage bird fanciers to join. Any information can be had on application to Mr. Benj. Moss, the hon. secretary, 1, Walton Crescent, Walton, Warrington. B. MOSS.

ROUGH TIMES IN THE FAR NORTH.

SIR,—It may interest some of your readers to hear that Fort William exhibitors had a very trying time with their exhibition birds during the storm of last week. Mr. W. H. Macdougall sent seven birds to Bathgate Show on the Friday morning, and the train stuck in the snow for most of the day and night; consequently, the birds must have arrived at Bathgate unfit for the show bench. But Mr. Macdougall was not so unfortunate, as Mr. W. Simpson, who had ten entries at Oban Show, and Mr. D. Bryce and Mr. D. Rankin, who had seven birds entered between them. Their birds left Oban on the Friday afternoon, and were snowed up on Rannoch Moor till the Sunday afternoon, or a period of nearly fifty hours, in the bleakest part of Scotland, where no seed could be got for them. Mr. Simpson's yellow winning hen at the Horticultural Hall and his buff hen third at the same show, and winners at other shows could not stand the tempest, and died on the way. The summit of this line is 1,400 feet above sea level. The railway officials did what they could for the comfort of the birds, but they had plenty to do to look after themselves in such a storm—one of the severest experienced for many years.

SCOTCH THISTLE.

PRIZE MONEY AT KILMARNOCK O.C.B.S. SHOW.

SIR,—In reply to Mr. Adamson's letter on the above, he states my figures are misleading and false. I may state again my figures are quite correct. My reason for writing was to let the Fancy know how exhibitors can be taken in by societies with schedules worded like Kilmarnock. Rule 9 reads:—"Unless over seven entries, full prize-money will not be paid." Under that rule I hold you can pay an exhibitor what you like, as you have done in the case of Mr. Roddie, who had a second and fourth in full classes, and you gave him the magnificent sum of 1s. Really, I think the "genius of finance" is still in Kilmarnock. Yet now, Mr. A., you tell us it is the rule of shows in Scotland to pay half prize-money when classes are not full. Some societies do, but they put it in their rules, so you know what you are going to get. Edinburgh and Paisley have this rule. Kilsyth, Broxburn, and Bathgate pay 2nd prize-money to 1st bird. These are only a few schedules that I have besido me; my others are all destroyed, but the majority, as I said, pay 2nd prize to 1st bird. Now, perhaps you can inform us who it was that was writing all over the country for entries a day or two before the show? Mr. Murdoch, your secretary, whom I saw at Kilmarnock New Year Show, said he knew nothing about it. I am afraid there was more than one secretary. Mr. Young, of Rutherglen, told me he had a letter from Kilmarnock asking for entries for any class in the show except Class 35. Now, Mr. Young looked to see what class this was, and saw it was Buff Border Cocks, where he would have shown one. You would take a man's entries in classes that were full, but not in the class you had "stuck at 7." If your show was not a paying concern, it was not for the want of trying by every dodge you could to make it pay. I enclose you a letter, Mr. Editor, which I hope you will publish; I had two more, which are both destroyed, much the same as the enclosed. It will show your readers what another exhibitor thinks of the way he was treated. Now, Mr. A., your personal remarks I think might have been left out of this controversy altogether, as I don't consider bringing in this side issue, of "what kind of a fancier" I am, will do your society any good in regard to paying their prize-money. My standing as a fancier is well known over Scotland. I am one who is never afraid to speak my mind at a show, or anywhere else, if I see any dirty work going on. Now I claim the right to reply to your remarks, as there are always two sides to a story. Your first statement, that I wanted to get my birds away one hour and a-half before the show closed is a falsehood. I was out in town along with Mr. Thomson (Glasgow), when we met a lot of fanciers with their boxes going to the station. We asked if the show had closed, and they answered "Yes." We hurried to the hall and found most of tho birds packed. We packed our birds and put them aside on a form, as we were all going to the station together (Mr. Patterson, Bonnybridge; Mr. Griffiths, Glasgow; Mr McPhail, Glasgow; and Mr. Thomson), when up comes a committee-man and demands to see my birds, with the remark that a bird had been stolen in Glasgow Show and they did not want the same thing there. As he did not ask any other fancier to show his birds, I took it as an insult, and I may say I did give him a bit of my mind and abuse. If I had taken the advice of about a dozen spectators, who heard his remark, I should have been in the police office instead of Glasgow that night. That was the year Mr. Cleminson (of Preston) lost his yellow cock at Glasgow. A number of Glasgow fanciers coming up in the train told me then I ought to show the whole affair up in the Fancy papers; but as it was their first show, and I know the committee-man was a bit officious, I let the matter drop, as I did not want to do the show any harm. Now, readers have both sides of the story. As for my remarks about not showing again at Kilmarnock, I did say that, but I showed because the judge, Mr. McCredie is a man I like to exhibit under, and it was the only show I had a chance of showing under him—I did not show out of any respect I had for some of the committee in Kilmarnock.

ANDREW MILLER.

[With regard to the letter Mr. Miller sends to us, we cannot, of course, publish it without the permission of the writer.—EDITOR.]

SIR,—Regarding the letters in CAGE BIRDS under the above heading, I do not intend answering Mr. A. Miller's letter, except to say that we paid full prize money in all classes containing over seven exhibits, and half prize money in those containing under seven. I am very sorry Mr. Roddie rushed into print about his prize money. I was away from home for a fortnight at the beginning of the New Year, and when I came home I got his letter and rectified the mistake at once, and sent on the balance, also an apology for the error. It was my mistake and not the society's. It is a mistake I think I may safely say will occur in the case of anyone, but from my one year's experience as secretary I find that no errors of any kind will be tolerated by exhibitors. All prize money has been paid, and anyone not having received theirs might kindly drop me a card to that effect, when it will be put right at once. JAS. B. Y. MURDOCH,

Sec. Kilmarnock O.C.B.S.

A CRESTED CANARY CLUB MATTER.

SIR,—With regard to Mr. Tyson's letter of last week, that points made by members of the Crested Canary Club at the coming Crystal Palace Bird Show will count in the "Roberts" Cup competition, we should like to say a few words. If members will refer to the clubs' patronage, in the rule book, they will find the twenty specified shows for this competition do not include the Palace. Now, in our opinion, if points are counted, it will be a great injustice to members who, thinking the competitions over, have their crests cut (as wo have), so are debarred from exhibiting, even if they would, and for this reason are likely to be displaced from a position which has been hardly won. Mr. Roberts (the donor of the cup) will, we are sure) see that it is most unfair for his cup to bo competed for, as no intimation had been given until the very last day for the posting of entries, and also, it had already been up for competition at the completo number (20) of shows. ## SUCCESSFUL CANARY BREEDING OUT-OF-DOORS.

SIR,—I have got a few Canaries, and they are outdoors in a shed, all caged up. They keep very healthy. There is no artificial heat of any sort, but the cocks are singing like mad to one another. I reared 21 young birds last season with one of the cocks, a Cinnamon-marked Yorkshire. I hope and think I shall have good luck with them this coming season. I look forward for CAGE BIRDS every Friday night when I get home from the pit, as I acquire a lot of information from it. F. TITFORD.

NEW SOCIETY FOR PENDLEBURY, SWINTON AND DISTRICT.

SIR,—A successful meeting of fanciers was held in the Blue Ribbon Hall, Pendlebury, January 21st, a large number of fanciers being present. It was decided to form a society to be called Pendlebury, Swinton and District Cage Bird Society. Mr. Fish explained the benefits of being members of a society. It was decided that Mr. F. Fish be president, Mr. J. Wallwork treasurer, and Mr. Alex. Donnelly, 46, Swinton Hall Road, Swinton, near Manchester, secretary. The committee elected were:—Messrs. F. Holt, Hewitt, S. Gibson, J. Seddon, W. Lloyd, J. W. Ashton, W. Ashton, E. Collier, the committee to be added to as we increase in membership. It was further decided to have the Blue Ribbon Hall, Pendlebury, as our headquarters. Meetings are to be held every Thursday night at 8 p.m., when all fanciers and friends are welcome.

THE TYPE OF PRESENT DAY WINNING NORWICH PLAINHEADS

SIR,—I have been reading Mr. Bertie's letter in your last issue on the above, and to an observant mind there are many things, in addition to the judging of Norwich Plainheads that appear very funny. For instance, a competition is promoted by CAGE BIRDS as to the most suitable breed of Canary for the beginner in the Fancy to commence with, yet though the majority of competitors recommend the Border, the prize is awarded to the Norwich. Personally, I think that is a nasty "bat" to both the Borders and their supporters. Again, you read articles by well-known exhibitors of different varieties, advising you what to insist on when buying birds, and also what to shun; and yet, when you see birds sent by them to would-be customers you stand amazed. It reminds me of an exhibitor here, who, twenty-five years ago, sent to what was then a leading judge of Canaries for two Norwich hens, for which he was to pay a stiff price; but who, on returning them by first available train after arrival, enclosed a note asking him "if these were Norwich, what were the birds that he was awarding prizes to in Norwich classes?"

JOS. B. MOORE.

[Mr. Moore draws entirely erroneous conclusions. The prize was awarded by the judges to the best answer sent in (vide the annonnced conditions); the judges did not know what the voting was; we ourselves counted the postcards after their decision had been arrived at. We announced the fact that the Borders "led the way," because we thought it a "feather in the cap" of the "Wee Gem"—and receive a "nasty bat" from Mr. Moore in return for doing so! What a world of misunderstandings this is! We have always been amongst the staunchest of supporters of the Border Fancy Canary.—EDITOR.]

---

SIR,—On receiving my CAGE BIRDS and going through the correspondence, I was pleased to see the letter from J. Bertie, again opening out the question of the present-day type of winning Norwich Plainheads, which, in my opinion, are more suited for the breeding room than on the show bench. Instead of birds of the Bullfinch type (which I am sure we all like to see), what do we find? Nothing but birds of the Crest-Bred type at the top, and the short, typical, cobby birds anywhere. Mr. Bertie seems to throw all the blame on the judges, but here I beg to differ. I think they are not so much at fault as the specialist clubs who put them on their list (and the societies engage them on the strength of getting the club's patronage). Take the Norwich Plainhead Club's model, which I am sure is the true type, and the stamp of bird we should all like to see winning, but in their model and their scale of points are to be found two entirely different types of bill. In the first place, twenty-five points are allowed for bead, and I don't think I need go any further for proof than this—that to score the full number of points, you will have to use birds of the Crest-Bred persuasion, and in using these, you will upset type and quality (which, in my opinion, come first), and breed birds long-sided, heavily browed, loose-feathered, etc., etc. I trust the time is not far distant when we shall see type and quality first and size and colour after. A TRUE NORWICH FANCIER.

GATESHEAD 1908 SHOW.

SIR,—I tender you, on behalf of myself and committee, our best thanks for the large space you allotted in your valuable paper to the report of our late show. It is indeed pleasing, when scanning the report, to find that your reporters found no grounds for complaint, and we all greatly appreciate their many kind remarks, which proved quite a "tonic" to our officials after the hard work they put in at the show, and I am sure they will look forward to our 1909 show with renewed determination that it shall beat all previous ventures in our history. With best wishes for the success of CAGE BIRDS,

THOS TAYLOR, Hon. Sec.

P.S.—These are copies of letters received from exhibitors and two of many, for which we thank the many friends who have so kindly congratulated us.

Galashiels.

SIR,—Many thanks for kind wishes. Prize money to hand correct; thanks for prompt payment. Birds arrived home in grand condition, and packed A1. It is a pleasure to send to a show like yours.—J. TAIT.

Aldeby.

SIR,—I am writing to tell you that all our birds arrived home safely to-day. I particularly wish to thank you for the very careful way the birds were all packed, for which I am deeply grateful. They started to sing directly they were unpacked, and all were in the pink of condition. With renewed thanks.

HELEN GAZE.

THE RECENT DUDLEY SHOW.

SIR,—Kindly allow me just a small space in our most worthy paper, CAGE BIRDS, to express my congratulations to the secretaries, Messrs. J. G. Leech, J. J. Mullett, W. H. Bill, and committee of the Dudley Cage Bird Show, which was held at the Temperance Hall on the 20th and 21st January last. I am a breeder and exhibitor of Norwich and Yorkshire Canaries, but did not exhibit this year on account of a "move" I had last August, and so was unable to colour feed. I am a perfect stranger to Dudley (living in North Shropshire). I have attended a good many shows during this season, and I can assuro you that my friends and myself were delighted to see the way in which the show was laid out. The show being held at a temperance hall made it more popular than if it had been held at an hotel, where many fanciers and visitors draw a line at attending, more especially the ladies, and I can assuro you I, for one, like to see their presence among our feathered pets. I noticed, for one thing, that the committee were most obliging, for you could see them explaining to visitors the different species of birds which our fanciers go in for in their hobby. Being a stranger, I was introduced to the secretary, Mr. Leech, and met with a good welcome in a good old Worcestershire style. The reason I have written is because I have heard frequently both fanciers, exhibitors, and would-be fanciers say: "I would certainly patronise the show by my presence only for its being held at an hotel." I hope to see even more exhibits at the Dudley Show in future years. I was very much taken up with the singing Roller class, also the Foreign classes.

A SOCIETY SUGGESTED FOR BOOSBECK, LINGDALE AND CHARLTONS.

SIR,—Allow mo a small space in your valuable paper to ask the reason why a place like Boosbeck is so far behind the times? In this place reside numerous bird-keepers, so I think that a few lines in CAGE BIRDS might perhaps set some of the old hands going, and form a bird club, so that a lot of novices like myself could attend their meetings, and gather bits of information, so that we may become practical birdy men. We are living within a mile or two of other places where there are still more birdy men, who have been showing at local shows and come off winners every time. If they were to all unite and form a bird club and call it, "The Boosbeck, Lingdale and Charltons Cage Bird Society," I am certain that members would join by the score. Then we could show some of the large clubs that there is still something left in Yorkshire.

A BIRDY MAN.

PRIZE MONEY AT DULWICH O.S. SHOW.

SIR,—Mr. Sandy states in his letter of last week that when he writes to the press it is usually with an object. It does not require an extraordinary amount of intelligence for anyone to see that the only object he has in view in this case is to try and ruin the future prospects of the Dulwich O.S. I quite agree that exhibitors are not a bad lot, taken as a body. It has been proved in this instance, for out of the half-dozen exhibitors we owe prizes to in the open classes, Mr. Sandy is the only one who has troubled to rush to the Press. The remaining fanciers, I am pleased to say, sympathise with us in our difficulty. Another well-known exhibitor wrote to say that apologies were not necessary, as he only showed for the honour of showing. What a contrast to your correspondent, who for the sake of a paltry few shillings (which I hope for heaven's sake, that our hon. sec. will soon send), rakes up a correspondence that he pretends to dislike. The custom over Dulwich way is to work jolly hard for exhibitors, and do their best. Because we are a little behind with some prize money it should not undo all the good we have done, The letters we are receiving with promise of future support give us encouragement. Mr. Sandy has a lot to learn about customs. I ought to ignore Mr. Sandy's reference to the 1907 correspondence with Mrs. Reeves (for his information, it was with "Mr." Reeves), and I don't think either the lady or gentleman will feel at all flattered that Mr. S. takes the opportunity of dragging their names into a distasteful correspondence. As for myself, although I attained the pinnacle of notoriety Mr. Sandy credits me with, I feel proud to say I am too much of a sportsman to follow Mr. S.'s example and hit below the belt. Personalities are not desirable at any time. G. F. WOOLHOUSE.

SOME OBSERVATIONS ON MANX SHOWS.

SIR,—As a keen observer of all that has taken place during the recent cage bird show season, I am sorry to record a falling off in the number of exhibits. No doubt the wretched breeding season in no small measure contributed to the decline in the feathered birth-rate on the Island, especially in Canaries. Fanciers don't seem to make much progress in the Crested birds here. The Crests have plenty of body, with small head pieces, and some of them look as though they have their caps the wrong side up with the centre too far back. In the Plainhead Norwich classes, there were some fairly good-bodied birds, but some of these failed badly in head and neck, and also lacked the quality of good Norwich. The Yorkshires were a moderate lot, some fairly good birds putting in an appearance. These were well drawn, and stood well up on the leg. Taking this section all through, the birds were rather on the small side, and very pale in colour, as also were the Norwich. I was expecting to see some of my old favourites, the Lizards, as I overheard there were one or two "knock-outs" in Douglas. Rumour has it, however, that they will be shown at the Palace. The Cinnamons were down badly, yellows and buffs, cocks and hens being exhibited in the same class. I cannot understand this, as they are among the most useful birds in the stock room. Breeders should introduce some Norwich blood into these birds to improve type, as they seem to hug the perch rather too much. In the Variety Canary class, I noticed some entered as Border Fancies. The Manx air must agree with them, for they would have passed muster in the Norwich classes. Mules were rather a disappointing lot. The old faces turned up again, and took almost the same honours. Goldfinches did not come up to my expectations for the Island, as I thought there was nothing very special outside the winners. I overheard that the winner found his way over here from the land of the bloater, through an advert. in CAGE BIRDS Linnets turned up well, and gave the judge something to do in the way of separating them. The Scotch winner was leading, a bird of grand colour and pencilling. Most of the birds in this class had not that coveted peg-top shape. There was great interest in this class; and a bloodless battle was fought by two well-known exhibitors. The any-other species of British class contained some good birds. There was quite an object lesson here, although colour seemed to hold the field, especially in the Hard-bills. I think that the large British have not returned from their last migration, for only one young Cornish Chough turned up. One pleasing feature of the show was the grand display of green amongst the cages, the contrast being excellent. The Club cages seem to be ignored here. Probably some of the cages on view, if shown at an English show, would incur the penalty of disqualification.

NON-PAYMENT OF PRIZE MONEY AT SHOWS—AN APPEAL.

SIR,—Being a fancier of the feathered tribe for many years, and having spent a few pounds in that direction, also in the way of meeting deficits of running shows, I often feel rather ashamed to see how some fanciers rush into print over this matter. I allude particularly to the uncharitable language that is sometimes used with, I think, no other object than to bring about the downfall of shows concerned. I see no other object, unless, indeed, it is the desire of the writers to advertise themselves. Take some of their notes. One fancier says: "I made six entries, winning two firsts, one second, two thirds, and vhc." Another says: "My Scotch Fancy took first in a class of eight," and so on. These things, in my opinion, have nothing whatever to do with the question at issue. What is the real grievance? They have not yet received their prize money. Surely patience ought to be shown. Do we show for the mere object of what we can make out of it? Is not our hobby run to bring about social intercourse, to assist one another in supporting those who, at great expense of time and often money, have the pluck to promote those splendid shows that are now within the reach of all lovers of the Fancy? Or is it the intention of some writers to drag them down, simply because they are asked for their kind consideration for a few weeks when all will be right. I say to fanciers—be men, be patient, show that you are sportsmen, elevate yourselves, and by so doing you elevate the Fancy that we are so proud of. Give every assistance to your neighbouring society, if you are not already connected with one, and go through the mill a few times with a deficit facing you. Then you will look at the matter, as I would like all fanciers to do—with patience, and charity to all. FAIRPLAY.

CANARIES OUT IN INDIA.

SIR,—I do not wish to be without my copy of CAGE BIRDS. It is a grand paper for those who, like myself here in Bombay, are away from all experienced fanciers, and have no one to turn to for advice. Often, in my early days in the Fancy, I felt inclined to throw the whole thing overboard in despair; but on turning to your valuable paper, I frequently learnt that there were others in England as bad off as myself; then I would have another try, and I am very thankful to say that those days are now passed, owing to the lessons learned weekly from your valuable paper, and the practical experience gained. As your paper is now read by many in India I would like to draw your attention to a question answered by Mr. J. North in CAGE BIRDS, No. 203 (Dec. 2nd, 1905). His answer was as follows:—"I have the impression, however, that heavily-feathered, big-bodied birds, such as Crests, Lancashires, and some strains of the Norwich Plainhead, are unsuitable for the Indian climate on account of their plumage, rendering them too hot; and although Canaries like to be kept warm, it is easy to overdo it in such cases as yours." Now, Sir, I would like to correct that idea, for it is quite wrong, as Crests, Lancashires, Norwich Plainheads, Yorkshires, and Lizards can be kept in first-class order here in Bombay. The temperature is high, and the breeding season is from February 15th (not earlier) to the middle of May, or a few days longer if necessary. At the commencement of the season the temperature stands at about 70 deg. Fahr., and gradually rises to 92 deg. Fahr., about the middle of May. No doubt you will think that such heavily feathered birds as Crests would suffer very much from the heat, but that is not so. They are as lively and as brisk as it is possible for a bird to be. From sixteen pairs of Crested stock which I put up last season, I bred 103 youngsters, of which I lost only four; and all the Crested stock have brought up their own youngsters. For the last two seasons I have had no bad feeders or sweating hens. I must now thank you for those wonderful coloured plates which we receive from time to time with CAGE BIRDS—they are grand indeed. Wishing success to CAGE BIRDS.

P. HUNTER.

The Goldfinch and Its Management.

By CHARLES PRIOR.

A Practical Article written to accompany the Coloured Plate, "A Family Party of Goldfinches," presented with the Birthday Number.

A great blaze of enlightenment has been passing over the entire bird world during the past few years, and in no section is it more strikingly reflected than in the Goldfinch classes of to-day. Whereas formerly a few birds stood right out and carried all before them, now the level quality of the exhibits is only less remarkable than the extremely high order of merit. At our biggest exhibitions many even of the unnoticed birds are gems; and difficult indeed is the task of the judge who has to decide which are perforce to be left out "in the cold." Now, as never before, is the feeding and staging of Goldfinches approached by the many with that comprehensiveness which was once the prerogative of the few. Now, "past-masters" of the art are abundant—almost common. The novices are the few; and it is to the few that the remarks which immediately follow are addressed.

A "Leg Up" for the Novice.

From the novice's standpoint—the foot of the ladder—it seems a long way to the top. It is. The middle is crowded enough in all conscience; but there's plenty of room right at the very top. The question is: How to get there? Well, the materials to begin with are patience, keenness, and a good bird. Don't wait, though, for a bird without a fault. You will never get one. Nobody ever had one. Don't trouble about the blaze being cut out square with geometrical exactness. A square blaze is a good thing in its way, but many fanciers will recall winners—Palace winners—whose blazes were not square.

Don't start counting the buttons and wondering if there is one too few or one too many. Don't worry yourself about his bars and moons; leave them to the show reporter. Don't mind if he crosses his wings a bit—every Goldfinch does sometimes. Crossed wings—fiddlesticks! Get as good a bird as you can, by all means. With as much blaze as possible — certainly. Then apply yourself to the task of getting him steady. Keep him in a not-too-large box cage; visit him as often as possible, give him a tit-bit each time you visit him, stand close by while he eats it, and play with him a trifle afterwards.

Time, Health, and Water.

After that, everything depends upon time, health and water. Water is for his bath, which he must be offered daily. Health will be secured by correct treatment and unflagging attention. Health will carry him quickly through the moult, and reproduce in enhanced brightness his already brilliant colours. Health, aided by the bath, will secure tight feather and exquisite polish, and a bright eye.

Time is required to complete his domestication, to gain that gentle steadiness which does not resent close examination, but rather invites and poses for it. This advanced degree of steadiness is often not acquired until the second show season. True it is that there are here and there birds whose serenity of disposition it seems impossible to ruffle. These, however, are the exception; the "gems," few in number but great in attractiveness, who from the very first accept captivity as a matter of course, and fairly revel in the delights of a state to which hardship and want are strangers.

More generally the timorous nature of the bird asserts itself in the unaccustomed bustle of an exhibition, and though he may be tame enough to be stroked at home, he is likely to be overcome by nervousness amid strange scenes and so many strange faces. In his agitation he travels the perches much too swiftly; gets "fluffy" at the thighs, and "horny" about the head; destroys, in short, the generally spick and span condition which he maintains at home. He thus easily "pegs" himself behind his well-conducted neighbour, who, possibly without being his equal technically, yet takes the perches with ease and style, and encourages inspection of the good points he possesses. Time, however, will put this matter right; time and a riper experience of being shown. Time, also, will witness an improvement on his first season form in most other respects. Indeed, it may truly be said that if a Goldfinch is destined to put together a great show record, he will do it in his second, third, and fourth seasons. Hence the value of patience.

There is one other point which may suitably be touched upon, and that is the question of environment. The cage, whatever its size, should be of the box-pattern. The situation should be cheerful, airy, and bright. The atmosphere should be normal, i.e., not heated. Of course, a separate bird-room, whether in the house or a snug outside structure, is the very best place that can be had. If it has a south, south-eastern, or south-western aspect, it is simply ideal. The things most to be avoided are dampness, draughts, extremes of temperature, and a stagnant atmosphere. No artificial heating need be resorted to, even in the severest weather; but it would, of course, be unwise to introduce, until genial conditions prevail, any specimen unaccustomed to the cold.

And here let us bid our charming little subject adieu! Let us wish him, in freedom, a perpetual harvest of the good things of the earth; an abundant choice of feeding land and breeding land. May his numbers ever increase. If the seeming misfortune of capture should overtake him let us see to it that the seeming misfortune is a blessing in disguise. Let us inspire in him a speedy reconciliation to his altered lot. Let us make it our aim, our boast, that the exchange of freedom for a protected condition works out entirely to his advantage. So may we supply the most fitting answer to those persons who, from lack of a better understanding—perhaps even wearing the remains of some poor feathered thing on their person; certainly without the saving grace of human charity in their hearts—scream forth their denunciations of bird-catching and bird-keeping. So may our blithe little prisoners show, by their happy and joyous demeanour, as well cared-for pets, that, even if deprived of the "joys of liberty," they hanker for them not. And while their merry song rings out clear and sweet into the frosty air, let their less fortunate brethren who have freedom present the reverse side of the medal; the side which tells of food and drink locked out of reach in winter's icy grip, of privations, of struggles, and finally of death's happy release. Then let those good but misguided folk aforementioned open their minds to the conviction that the "humanity" point of view is not confined to one side only; that there is more in the question than their philosophy dreams of; and that, however large their stock of knowledge, they have yet a little more to learn—about Goldfinches.

Management of Scotch Fancy and Belgian Canaries.

By THOMAS SMITH.

Some fanciers with first-class stock fit to win in the keenest of competition content themselves, so far as exhibiting is concerned, by showing at a confined club exhibition, which is maintained by annual membership subscriptions. These societies are very popular, and where the regulations permit, fanciers are affiliated to two or three Associations of that kind; and in contenting themselves with exhibiting at these confined club shows they never patronise an open show. This is one of the causes which account for the falling-off in numbers at the open shows.

Belgians do not receive equal encouragment with Scotch Fancy Canaries, chiefly because they are so few in number, and do not merit better classification. The classification, even at large exhibitions, ranges from one to five classes. Where there are five classes, the fifth is usually for young Belgians drawn from the other classes. A liberal classification for Belgians is: Yellow cocks, any colour; yellow hens, any colour; buff cocks, any colour; and buff hens, any colour.

The Scotch Fancy Canary is treated more liberally. The classification at large shows is as follows:—Yellow cock, clean; yellow hen, clean; yellow foul cock; yellow foul hen; yellow piebald cock; yellow piebald hen; yellow green cock; yellow green hen; buff cock, clean; buff hen, clean; buff foul cock; buff foul hen; buff piebald cock; buff piebald hen; buff green cock; buff green hen; together with two or four classes for selling competition birds.

At the secondary exhibitions two classes are put into one, such as the foul yellow and buff, and green yellow and buff; but that is not a satisfactory mode of competing, the buff being coarser in the feather, is larger, and, consequently, has a far better chance of winning than the finer yellow, unless the yellow happens to be larger than the ordinary bird and the buff smaller.

Great importance is attached to size, and the winner requires both size and style for the show bench. On the judges coming across a Scotch Fancy Canary with size and style, it is put to the top of the table, and a smaller one with even a shade more style will not supplant it.

Condition of Exhibits.

The plumage and condition of a parlour singing Canary, which is kept in a beautiful golden coloured cage, will not meet the requirements of a show Scotch Fancy or Belgian Canary. It must be scrupulously clean, every feather full grown and in its place; in short, must be in such a perfect state that it will show all its good qualities to perfection.

It is by no means easy to keep high-class Canaries in excellent condition which fanciers in a city, where everything soon becomes polluted with smoke, would like. When hand-washing is resorted to, the feathers speedily becomes soiled. City-kept birds do well at the opening exhibitions, but as the season advances they lose in competing against their fresh country competitors. Yet this notwithstanding, the city fancier as a rule is, if anything, keener than the country fancier.

Fond of the Bath.

It is an advantage to have exhibits that are fond of the bath. They are more easily kept clean. Care has to be exercised to have clean cages, so that the bird will not get soiled in shaking and priming itself. Clean perches are also needful, the bird being apt to rub itself on them.

A healthy vigorous bird is more easily kept in the pink of condition than a soft, weakly subject. Where a bird displays signs of being out of sorts, it should be kept at home until it recovers. The rise and fall in the temperature in the journey to and from shows is apt to lead to chest and other troubles. Instead of giving an exhibit cold water to drink on its return from the show, give it lukewarm scalded milk, removing it an hour afterwards, as it is not wise to leave the milk to become stale. Water can be supplied to be available for the bird first thing in the morning.

From One Cage to Another.

No class of birds is more easily trained to pass quickly from one cage to another than the Scotch Fancy and Belgian Canaries. They should hop gently from perch to perch when properly trained; but at shows birds are to be seen banging from the entrance end of the one cage against the wires in the far end of the other cage and knocking their flights out. Not infrequently the birds meet with bodily injury.

I have seen a bird in that way go into a serious fit, and another dislocate its wing, which in an exhibit which has solely to depend upon its position is a permanent disqualification for the show bench. They should be dealt with and handled gently. This is the only way to impart confidenee, which is really indispensable in the successful Scotch Fancy and Belgian Canary. A fancier should avoid the very appearance of roughness in going about his stock.

In Search of Stock.

The uninitiated, and the men who know no better, think there is no difficulty in securing stock, and that all that is required is cash. But that is a great delusion. Fanciers who are really fanciers keep their best, and no inducement, not even an offer far above the birds' intrinsic value, will lead them to part with their favourites. It is on that account that sensational purchases are heard of. The fever-stricken have often to pay the catalogue price, which was never meant as a selling price, but regarded as a prohibitive figure to ensure the return of the bird to its owner from the show.

Selling prices are eagerly scanned at every show, and where a suitable bird is entered at a moderate price it is secured almost the moment the catalogues are on sale.

When the stock has a reputation, there is a danger in picking up a bird at a show. A fairly good bird may be out of a very inferior strain, and at any price may be dear, and instead of helping to raise his stud, the purchaser of such a bird may set his strain back so far as to take him years to recover. The greatest drawback to the average man who takes up the Scotch Fancy Canary is the large amount of money it takes to purchase a pair worth breeding. It is of no use entering the arena with inferior stock.

A very good plan is to purchase one cock and two hens of extra quality, and a few feeding pairs. If successful with such a foundation, it is possible to raise up from it the nucleus of a first-class stock. It is well-known that many of the winners come from a single pair of birds that happen to blend, or strike those qualities that are sought after in every direction. Breeders who have a renowned strain can never have sufficient birds to meet the demands they have.

Just a line in praise of our grand Birthday Number of CAGE BIRDS. The plates are lovely productions, especially the one on Goldfinches and Greypates, and that on "Foreign Birds for Beginners." These two plates alone are worth more than the 3d. charged for the issue. I wish CAGE BIRDS a prosperous New Year.—N. UNDERWOOD (Devizes).

Your grand special Birthday Number must have given great pleasure to your numerous readers. It appears to me your efforts are to quite eclipse all previous attempts, and to my mind, CAGE BIRDS is very successful. The plates given with this number are works of art, which reflect great credit on your artists. They have been very much admired by my friends. What wouldn't one give to own such a bird as the cock Goldfinch depicted?—J. A. TONKS (Wednesbury).

Aboot the monster Birthday Number;
It'll sell like lightning—it's a wonder
Tae all bird keepers.
And when yo scan its columns doon,
Ye'll see ads. come frae every toon,
Which tae the Fancy's a great boon—
The're profit reapers.
E. FARMER (Edinburgh).

The plates with this week's CAGE BIRDS—the Birthday Number—are simply magnificent and worth double the amount charged; and the information I have received from your valuable paper this past year( this being the first in which I made an attempt at Canary breeding), is worth ten times what I paid for the papers. I have done well.—H. HARRIS (Nottingham).

Allow me to congratulate your artists for the amount of ability they have shown in the manner the coloured plates appear. Great credit is due to them. And I must not forget to express my many thanks for whatever knowledge I may have gained from your valuable paper, CAGE BIRDS. I entirely owe my success to CAGE BIRDS. I wish it every success in the future.—J. E. HOWARTH (Dewsbury).

Your Birthday Number of CAGE BIRDS is not only a marvel for the price, but a distinct advance on all former efforts. The plates are works of art, masterpieces, and true to nature. The greatest credit is due to your artists for their admirable work, and likewise to the authors of the articles, which are both interesting and instructive. The plates are more than value for the price which is asked for the whole number.—R. G. JOLIFFE (Glasgow).

The Birthday Number of CAGE BIRDS was a grand threepennyworth. Who could but admire the plate of the "Weo Gems"? And how happy I would be with either! It is marvellous to what pitch of "perfection" you get all the plates in connection with your special numbers; each one that comes out seems to beat all previous ones. Accept my best thanks for it and my wishes for the success of CAGE BIRDS.—W. H. WRIGHT (Carlisle).

I cannot let the Birthday Number pass by without congratulating you. Truly it is a magnificent number, and your artist, Mr. Norman, has really surpassed himself in the coloured plate, which shows the ideal blaze of an exhibition Goldfinch. This plate is honestly worth 2s. 6d. I can fully endorse all that Mr. Prior has said in his article respecting the Goldfinch, having kept Goldfinches for a period of over thirty years.—GEO. DIX (Barnstaple).

Please accept my sincere and grateful thanks for the splendid treat you have given your readers—the Birthday Number of CAGE BIRDS. The coloured plates are indeed high-class works of art, and the drawing of the Hawfinch is life-like. I never saw anything to equal it. Indeed, it "makes my mouth water" to have one like him. I wish CAGE BIRDS and its artists long life and prosperity, to lead us readers of CAGE BIRDS both onwards and upwards.—J. PATTERSON (Chirnside).

I cannot pass CAGE BIRDS Birthday Number without praising it. The plates were grand, especially the family of Goldfinches, which are like life. My copy of the plate now hangs in my bird-room; it is a credit to Mr. Norman and the hints by Mr. Prior, if followed by fanciers, they will not go wrong, I am sure. I might say the number came a real "stunner" to me for the amount of 3d., and I am sure you have surpassed all that you have so far published. I wish CAGE BIRDS further success in the future.—F. R. E. HANDSCOMBE (Walthamstow).

Accept my sincere congratulations on the excellence of the plates in the Birthday Issue of CAGE BIRDS. The forcigners I consider most perfect, and the Finches and Greypates not only a study, but absolutely instructive. The plates reflect great credit on the artists. This is not the first time I have sent congratulations to CAGE BIRDS, but I could not allow the Birthday Number to pass without once more doing so. I might say I have taken CAGE BIRDS since its first number appeared, and I consider that at the stage at which it has now arrived the Fancy could ill afford to be without it.—ERNEST GOSTLING (Suffolk).

Permit me to congratulate you and the artists of CAGE BIRDS upon your Birthday Issue of last week. One could scarcely have imagined when they perused the first issue of C.B. some seven or eight ago that it was destined to be what it is to-day—the premier organ of the cage-bird Fancy. Both Mr. Norman and Mr. Goodchild are to be congratulated for they have both succeeded in producing very pretty plates, which will, I am sure, be treasured by your numerous readers who, if they are to be presented with similar plates, will be looking forward to the next birthday of C.B.—S. A. SANDY (Balham).

Your issue of last week is a wonderful production, and reflects very great credit upon your artists and your staff generally. The three plates are of the highest art, and worthy of a place in the peasant's humble home, or the nobleman's palace. Your journal contains a fund of information, and certainly far and away more complete details than are found in any other publication of the kind. You have legions of friends in Glasgow and the West of Scotland, and weekly new friends are clustering around. CAGE BIRDS has been of immense benefit to the Scotch Fancy Canary National Derby O.A.—THOMAS SMITH, secretary S.F.C.N.D.O.A. (Glasgow).

Marsh and Fenland.

The long stretch of marsh and fenland which once covered wide expanses of our soil, survive to-day in certain districts, but in much smaller tracts than formerly. Where once it was nothing but bog and reedy marsh, many fertile farms now exist, and only a few isolated acres can be found in its virgin wildness During the summer it is pleasant rambling over these stretches of flat land, following no beaten track, but just wandering where fancy dictates or some cunning wild bird allures one from its home in the coarse herbage. There is much to be seen and noted, and many an ornithological treasure hunted for in the reed-fringed streams. The stretches of land as far as the eye can reach, though flat, are rich with summer verdure, and a glorious expanse of sky, only seen in such open country. In winter all is changed, and at times, the same ground which we quartered in the hot summer days in search of Snipe or Pipit's nest, is completely covered with water; the exposed rising ground which appeared flat, before the flood came is now the daily feeding ground of whirling long-winged plovers or screaming gulls. When the water subsides and hard winter weather follows, then the marshland regains all its wild untamed aspect. The dykes and reedy meres are swarming with wild fowl, and flocks of smaller birds scour the boggy grassland. After a few days of hard weather, flocks of birds begin to move southward from the vast areas of northern Europe, and among these are great numbers of wildfowl, driven south by hunger. Many land in England, and are drawn down where the glint of frozen water among the reeds offers security and rest. To the sportsman and bird lover the charm of these fenlands is beyond description, and a daily visit to them always reveals some fresh visitors from the frozen north. As the sun goes down, and the misty darkness settles over the landscape, the outlook is wild and uncanny, but fascinating, vastly increased by the subdued chatter and wild cries of the seafowl, and the uneasy ways of the snipe and plover. At such times one lives a different life; one feels all the glamour of the wilderness, and solitude reigns around. Even on the homeward path the disturbed Teal and quick darting flight of the alarmed birds, keeps up the illusion to the very edge of the homeland.

Pugnacious Robins.

Although Robins are left pretty much to themselves while nesting they do not increase much in numbers. The fights between the old birds and the early broods of young which take place every autumn and winter, must considerably reduce their ranks.

A Note on the Ring Ousel.

The difference in size, form, and markings is more apparent in the Ring Ousel than in any of his kindred. Some are fine, bold birds, but devoid of colour and crescent; others excel in these points but are deficient in size and form. A bird of this species, perfect in every way is seldom met with, even where the Ousels are most abundant.

Bullfinches in Winter.

Along the taller hedgerows or at the edge of the wood, one can frequently hear the soft, plaintive note of the brightly-coloured Bullfinch. Although there may be many seen in a district and several at one time, a close observer will note that they are mostly in pairs. If a few single birds are seen, they are doubtless birds of the past season. If one disturbs them they fly off along the hedgerow in low, undulating flight, but do not fly far before alighting again. They are fond of the thicket and are seldom seen in the open fields excepting during very bad weather, when they can be noted among the taller weeds and coarse herbage.

CHATHAM.

First meeting of the year of the "Three Brothers" Bird Singing Association was held on January 24th, when eight pairs of birds were matched together for a five-minute contest, and some very good singing was heard for a silver cruet and china tea service. Mr. J. Harvey won with a very good bird, the score being 56, closely followed by Mr. H. King's young bird (score 51); 3, Mr. Estrell (46); 4, Mr. Sedgwick (40); 5, Mr. A. It was decided to hold the next meeting on January 31st, at the "Three Brothers," when fanciers and friends are invited. ### PENDLEBURY.

A successful Lark singing contest was held at the British Queen, Pendlebury, on January 23rd, when there was some grand singing. It was a pleasure to be in the headquarters of the Lark fanciers, and to see the birds being trained for the contests. Many good singers were out of the money through not "catching the watch." Mr. W. Hall, of Pendlebury, was in attendance on several of the best birds. The timekeeper and judge are deserving of much praise, having to sit in one place for five or six hours. The birds were hanging for 15 minutes; to sing twelve minutes. The awards were as follows:—1, Mills, 11m. 46sec.; 2, Lee, 10m. 37sec.; 3, Tom Young, 8m. 55sec.; 4, Smalley, 8m. 2sec. The timekeeper was Mr. E. Jackson, and the judge, Mr. E. Royle.—ALEC. DONNELLY.

I was greatly pleased, writes Mr. W. H. Wright (Carlisle), to see the sketch of my winning yellow evenly marked Border Fancy in the excellent Birthday Number of CAGE BIRDS, and especially to see what a good likeness Mr. H. Norman had made of him.

I have been a reader of CAGE BIRDS for some years. It gets more interesting every week. The Birthday Number is a record, the cheapest and best threepenny worth I ever bought. Norwich Plainheads are my fancy. I breed them, but have not got them to perfection yet—no first-class winners and so on—but have been greatly encouraged by your useful paper. I hope to do better as each year comes round.—H. CHAPMAN (King's Cross, N.)

CAGE BIRDS' Birthday issue is the best ever produced, and every cage-bird fancier, be he breeder or exhibitor, should become possessed of a copy. The varied subjects are written up by specialists and well-known experts. The illustrated supplement, a trio of fine coloured plates, and other novel features are sufficient for all tastes, and the entire combination is produced at great cost, and is one which the bird fancier should not miss.—"Rex," in the "Dewsbury Reporter."

THE SHOWS.

DEWSBURY AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

The last of the members' shows was held at the Royal Hotel on Jan. 23, 63 birds being staged. The competition in some of the classes was very keen. Mr. W. T. Hall won the gold medal in the champion section with 30 points; in the novice section Mr. W. T. Pickering won the gold medal with 46 points; the silver medal was won by H. Pollard with 42 pairs. Mr. J. Wilman placed the cards and gave every satisfactiou.

HALESOWEN.

The seventh Annual Show of Halesowen and Dist. F. and F.S. was held January 21st and 22nd, in the Drill Hall, one of the best rooms in the Midlands for such a purpose, being warm and cosy, with plenty of light. The cage birds were staged at the far end of the hall, immediately in front of the stage, and this section, with its many-coloured cages, birds, and prize cards, had a charming effect. The cage birds, as is invariably the case, attracted the attention of the majority of the visitors more than any other portion of the show, crowds surrounding them the whole time. Particular attention was paid to the birds by the hon. secretary, Mr. Chapman, in addition to the many other duties of his office. He was assisted in this section by Mrs. Chapman, who is as enthusiastic a fancier as the secretary himself. Mr. J. N. Harrison judged, and gave every satisfaction. Owing to clashing with Dudley, entries were not quite so numerous as might have been expected, but the quality was excellent.

TREDEGAR (MON.)

Held January 21st, in the Market and Town Hall. The show was a record one in all sections. Norwich and Yorks. were good classes in numbers, and grand in quality. Borders and Scotch Fancies were the only small classes. The British Goldfinch classes, Greypate, and house-moulted were exceptionally good, the first eight or ten in each class being hard to separate. The other British bird classes were small, but the winners in each were tip-top specimens. The hall was a splendid place for a show, having good light, and being heated by radiators; and everything was snug and comfortable. The officials were a splendid working body, and had a busy time all night, with such a bumping entry. Messrs. Bevan, Tippins and Hunt attended to the cage birds, and all the birds looked well. Mr. T. H. Melhuish judged.

LANCASTER PRIMROSE C.B.S.

The Lancaster Primrose C.B.S. held their second annual show of pairs and British birds recently, in the Market Coffee Rooms, Lancaster, a very central and suitable place. Entries came up somewhat badly considering the prize-money was so generous, viz., 15s., 10s., 5s., 2s. 6d., for 2s. entry fee. There were also good special prizes in addition. Messrs Ambler, Ferguson, and Dr. Herd had promised to act as judges, but under the circumstances neither the doctor's nor Mr. Ambler's services were called for, and Mr. Ferguson placed the tickets. There was a good attendance of the public, and the management was perfect. The show closed at 7 p.m., and the room was cleared by 8 p.m. The secretary, Mr. H. J. Brown, had the arrangements admirably in hand, and is deserving of every credit.

GLOUCESTER C.B.S.

The members of this society held their annual Pairs Show, at the Saracen's Head Hotel, on Jan. 21st., when a very nice lot of Norwich Plainheads were staged, and in nearly every instance they were well matched. Two classes were provided—one being for yellow cock and buff hen, the other for buff cock and yellow hen. There were twelve entries in the former class, and ten in the latter. The awards were made by Mr. J. H. Payne.

WOMBWELL AND DISTRIOT C.B.S.

Members' show held Jan. 16. The Wesleyan Reform School Room, in which the exhibits were staged, provided nice accommodation, and was of a very cosy description. An extra attraction was a drawing competition for the school children. A total of 156 efforts were placed on view. Some entertaining pictures were on view, and created much comment. Prizes were gained by those over 10 and under 13 years of age as follows: 1, P. Beacher; 2, J. C. Taylor; 3, E. Scargill; vhc, H. Handley; hc, S. Gleadhill; c, C. T. Hay. Under 10 years: 1, H. A. Ward; 2, S. Wright; 3, F. Copeland; vhc, F. Colinridge; c, F. Saville. Special prize for a girl was won by Miss E. Brookes. The members staged some good birds, some of which might do well in open competition. Cup for best Yorkshire went to C. Scrivner, who also won that for best Norwich. Cup for best British went to J. Walker. Stewards were Messrs. Moore, Scrivener, Walker, Thornsby, Shillits, and Saville, all of whom are to be congratulated on the exertions they put forth. Mr. C. Gleadhill, the hon. secretary, is the right man in the right place. Staging was of a very neat order, and everything went smoothly and well. Mr. J. C. Barnes (Sheffield) had the placing of the cards, and his awards were well received. Mr. F. C. Wilson adjudicated upon the drawings.

TONG AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

KIRKSTALL AND DISTRICT C.B.S.

Second members' show, held at headquarters on Jan. 16, when 62 birds faced the judge, Mr. King (Leeds), who gave every satisfaction. The number of entries was below that of the last show, no doubt due to the terrible weather. One fancier who took his birds by car had one case blown off into the hedge opposite. Luckily all was well. Yorkshires again topped the list. Norwich were less in number. Greens were few owing to a disaster in Mr. Denton's rooms, which all the members deeply regretted. In the A.O.V. class there were "all nations," the winner being a Chaffinch, in lovely condition and as steady as a rock. This was the final show to count for the specials, and these were won by Messrs. Yelland, Fowler, Hutton and Hornby, Mr. Chew scoring most points; but in order to give the beginners a chance he kindly withdrew.

SPALDING.

This excellently managed eastern fixture was held in the Corn Exchange on January 21st, but we are sorry to say that there was a drop of about 50 in the entry compared with last year, which may perhaps be in some measure accounted for by the wording of the schedule. Had the clears and ticks been put together, and the marks—even and uneven—the entry would doubtless have been larger, and the cancelled classes would have been well supported. The two classes for Norwich clear or even marked, and one of the Yorkshires so named, were scratched. The birds were nicely staged at the far end of the hall, and proved a great attraction to visitors. The quality was splendid, some very good birds being shown. The special for best in the show fell to a very handsome Goldfinch shown by Mr. H. W. Axe. Messrs. Facer, Thimbleby, Murrell, Walker, and Austin acted as special stewards of the section, and attended well to the needs of the exhibits. Messrs. Elviss, Mouncy, and Sisson, the hon. secretaries, were most indefatigable in the discharge of their duties, and left nothing undone that would conduce to the comfort of exhibitors and visitors. The weather was fine but cold, and the attendance came up well. Mr. C. A. House judged.

HALIFAX.

Halifax O.S. held their 19th annual open show, under Yorkshire Union rules and under the patronage of the Y.C.C., the C.M.Y.C.C., the O.N.P.C., and the Y.C.B.B. and M.C., on January 22nd and 23rd, in the Mechanics' Hall, Crossley Street, an ideal room for the purpose. Entries came up exceedingly well, there being 542 in the 34 classes, whilst the quality throughout the show was of the highest order. Yorkshires, both in champion and novice sections, were magnificent, and included many noted winners. Norwich made a good show, some rattling birds being on view. The British and Hybrid classes were very attractive and interesting, some rare birds being amongst the exhibits. Sandiford's Cup was won by Mr. S. Halgh and Hyde's special by Mr. Ball. This year the society very generously gave an extra prize of 2s. per class for the vhc's to encourage exhibitors, and this, no doubt, accounted for the bumping entry received. We were very pleased to see such a large attendance of visitors, thus further helping the show on its way to success. The secretary, Mr. J. F. Thackray, is an ideal official, and is to be heartily congratulated on the manner in which the show was conducted, everything being in first-class order. He was ably supported by the popular president of the society, Mr. A. Ross; the chairman, Mr. F. Lee; and the committee, Messrs. Ball, Clegg, and Jeffreys. Messrs. W. Vardy, W. Cruise, and E. E. Smith judged, and their awards were favourably received. The assistant secretary, Mr. H. Whitaker, had also worked hard, and it was unfortunate he should have been indisposed on the day of the show.

FORT WILLIAM.

Fort-William, Inverness-shire, held their 7th annual show on Jan. 21st, and it proved a record success. No less than 282 cage birds were staged, including some of the cream of the fancy. Scotch Fancies were a nice lot, while Norwich, both fed and non-fed, were the best of the Canary section, some real good ones being on view. Border Fancies and Yorkshires were a nice collection, some grand birds being present. Mules, British and Boys' classes, were the features of the show, and some of the classes were really grand, especially the Mules, Goldfinches and Siskins, some gems being staged. Taken on the whole, the quality of the exhibits was greatly in advance of that of last year. There was also a noticeable increase of about 90. The management of the show was in the capable hands of Mr. W. Simpson, who knows how to run a show successfully, and he was ably assisted by an enthusiastic committee, at the head of whom was the veteran Mr. Wm. McMaster. Mr. W. H. McDougal won the cup for most points, beating Mr. Skinner, last year's winner, by 5 points, the total of points being 121 and 116. Mr. Hooper cleverly captured Hyde's special with his uneven buff Border hen. Owing to the severe weather of late the journey north was not an enviable one for the judge, Mr. J. W. Bruce (Coldstream), who again officiated, his awards being exceedingly well received.

ALWAYS USE OUR DEPOSIT SYSTEM.

We are not responsible for the statements made in advertisements, nor of the bona-fides of either buyers or sellers In all transactions the adoption of our Deposit System should be insisted upon.

IMPORTANT.

SEND THE FULL COMMISSION.—If the full commission does not accompany the deposit, the vendor will not be notified of its receipt until the amount deficient, plus the extra postage incurred, has been paid to us.

HOW TO REMIT.—Under no circumstances will Cheques or Post-dated Money Orders be accepted as deposits. Uncrossed Postal Orders must be sent and the numbers taken for safety.

RULES.

1.—PROCEDURE.—The intending purchaser should send to this office the amount of the purchase (our deposit fee included), and at the same time he should communicate with the seller, stating what it is he requires sent on approval. We acknowledge receipt of the deposit to both parties. In all cases the depositor should give his name and address, and also that of the vendor, and must write same clearly and distinctly.

2.—END OF TRANSACTION.—The deposit is retained by us until we hear from both parties that the transaction has been completed. If a sale has been effected, we hand the amount deposited to the seller. If a sale has not been effected, we return the amount to the depositor. The transaction must be conducted by the parties themselves. We merely hold the deposit.

3.—AMOUNT OF COMMISSION.—The fee is 6d. for each £1, or fraction of £1, and it must be sent at same time as the deposit.

4.—IMPORTANT POINTS.—The depositor must decide within forty-eight hours of the receipt of the goods whether he will keep or return the same, unless, that is, some other period of approval (of which we must be advised) is agreed upon by both parties. The depositor must at the same time notify us of the fact that he has returned the goods. If the goods are not returned within the said forty-eight hours, we reserve the right to send the deposit to the seller after the expiration of that period. And should the seller fail within three days to notify us of the receipt of his goods back again, the transaction will be treated as ended, and the deposit be returned to the depositor.

5.—A SATISFACTORY PURCHASE.—When a transaction has been completed to the satisfaction of both depositor and seller, both parties must at once return the deposit receipts as a guarantee of its completion. The depositor must at the same time instruct us to pay over the deposit to the seller.

6.—GOODS ALREADY SOLD.—If the goods are sold before our deposit note reaches the seller, or, if for any other reason he declines to do business, he must at once return the deposit note to us. Failing its receipt, we reserve the right to return the deposit to the sender after the expiration of three days.

7.—FRESH TRANSACTION.—In case no sale be effected, a deposit is available for purposes of a fresh transaction, provided another deposit fee be paid.

8.—GOODS IN TRANSIT.—Goods in transit are at the seller's risk, and any damage or loss sustained on the journey must be borne by the seller. But goods not approved of must be properly packed and returned by the same means as were used in sending the same.

9.—PAYMENT OF CARRIAGE.—The payment of carriage must be a matter for arrangement between the vendor and depositor. We do not undertake to settle disputes affecting questions of carriage. But in the absence of other arrangements the purchaser is liable for the carriage of the goods, and if the goods are sent on approval and returned, each party pays the carriage one way.
